"Your bus service," remarked Dr. Sanderson, "is really remarkable. It is no mean task to transport 700 students from the Recreation Hall to the academic area for a lecture within a period of ten minutes."

Various other personalities of importance have visited Ajax since its opening apart from Dean Sanderson. Among these have been Premier George Drew, Principal Wallace of Queen's University, and Chancellor Gilmour of McMaster University.

Ontario Chief Justice To Address UC Dinner

Chief Justice R. S. Robertson will be the guest of honor at the annual graduation banquet for University College men and women, at the King Edward Hotel on Thursday, March 14.

Among the other guests will be President Sidney E. Smith, W. Taylor, Principal of University College, ex-Principal Malcolm Wallace, and W. J. McAndrew, registrar of the College.

Cards of invitation have been sent out to graduating students over the week-end, so the number of guests who will attend has not been computed as yet. "It is expected that there will be a larger number present than last year, because of the increased enrolment," Mary Mulligan, fourth year president of the Women's Undergraduate Association, announced last night.

"This is only a preliminary to the graduation exercises which take place in June," Miss Mulligan said.

Tops In Talent For Revue Culled From College Shows

University of Toronto students numbering 3,400 will this Wednesday and Thursday evenings receive a year's worth of campus entertainment in a single sitting when the All-Varsity Revue takes to its specially-constructed Convocation Hall stage.

In a single vast surprise-I.S.S. package the Revue audiences will witness highlight excerpts from this university's musical comedy productions of the past season.

Culling the best from the U.C. Polities, Dentanties, School Nite, Daffydill Night and the Vic Bob, the Revue producers have freshened and topicalized the material here and there have organized Varsity's outstanding entertainers into an integrated and lavish show.

Product of the co-ordinating efforts of I.S.S.-man Al Foster, the Revue will tomorrow evening parade its all-star boy and gal-littering cast in performances of the best from the five campus shows.

Recruited as comedy stars of the first combined revue to be presented by the University of Toronto, Don Harron and Alex Seigel will go through their surlieu paces.

Vitaminstrel Whitey Belshaw will baton a 26-piece swing orchestra as the most noteworthy of the production numbers from the college shows are re-presented. In addition the Belshaw aggregation will entertain with several special jump arrangements.

Originated as a skit night to raise funds for International Student Service, the All-Varsity Revue has taken more ambitious form than ever before as it loads the top talent on the campus aboard a single all-university stage vehicle.

Gas Research Self-Financed Pending Ottawa Grant Arrival, Prepared For Chemical Warfare

Stored in Secret Depots

By John McRae

Gas was never used in this war. Yet countries manufactured tons of it and stored it away just in case. Canada has just finished scuttling a LST loaded with the stuff in the deepest part of the ocean they could find and there is still a lot of it stored away in various secret depots. It seems a great waste of time, but, while in one part of the country chemists were putting forth their energies to discover the deadliest type of gas; in another, more chemists were working just as hard on anti-gas protection masks and agents to nullify the poisonous effects.

One of the centres of this protective work against gas was in the Banting Institute in the University of Toronto. At the beginning of the war Ottawa allotted specific jobs to research Laboratories all across Canada and the Banting Institute was given the task of studying the effects of all kinds of poisonous gases and trying to find protective agents for them. The work was looked after by Dr. C. C. Lucas, Associate Professor in the Banting-Best Medical Research Department, Dr. D. A. Irwin, pathologist and Dr. H. M. Macrae of the Department of Ophthalmology who was a member of the team until he went overseas. During the first year of the war the issuing of Government Grants was not well organized at Ottawa and as the late Sir Fredrick Banting considered the work important enough to go ahead without their financial aid the department financed the first year of research itself. After that the National Research Council took over and Grants were issued each year.

"The great advantage of Chemical Warfare is that the public is scared to death of it," said Dr. Lucas. It is mainly through journalistic effort that this idea has come about. What the public doesn't seem to realize is that somebody had to make the stuff. If you need 10,000 tons to kill the enemy somebody had to make it and he was in far greater danger than the soldier. There must have been some protection and any chemical which can be made can be protected against. That was our job—testing new compounds for noxious effects and trying to find therapeutic measures to protect personnel against any chemical that was poisonous in one way or another."

The chemists in the Banting Institute worked on phosgene, mustard gas, lewisite and five or six other poisonous gases still on the secret list. Whenever a new compound was discovered samples were sent to them and immediately they started work. They were concerned with two main problems; first, methods of detecting gases and secondly, methods of counteracting poisonous effects. (Continued on Page 8)

Brief Presented On Student House

Yesterday afternoon, a delegation representing the International Students' Club and the International Students' Service presented President Sidney E. Smith with a brief concerning the proposed International Students' House.

The brief contained references to the uses of the international house, including its possible leadership as a reservoir for information and assistance to various universities and international organizations throughout Canada.

The delegation also asked for the University's approval of the project and suggestions concerning finances and location.

Dr. Smith replied: "I am definitely in favor of this project and will make a special point of mentioning it to the Board of Governors in view of gaining their support, provided you succeed in getting the necessary funds."

The only possible place," he continued, "for the location of the building would be in the vacant lot between Trinity College and Devonshire Place."

The International Students' Club is co-operating with an alumni group of ex-members of American international houses. The delegation has been asked to attend the next meeting of the alumni group to discuss financial measures.

The brief will be published in greater detail in a later issue of The Varsity.

UNDERGRAD BACK ISSUES

Several copies of each issue of the University College Undergrad — years 1941 to 1945, inclusive — are urgently required for the library files. Any students willing to donate copies may contact Bob Weaver at Kingsdale 5272, between 6 and 7:30 P.M. Copies may also be dropped in the slot in the door of Room 10, University College.

UNDERGRAD MAGAZINE CONTRIBUTORS

Students who contribute literary and art work to the University College Undergrad may pick up the original material by calling at Room 10, University College between one and four o'clock on Thursday, March 7th.

Zero Zones Dampen Miami-Bound Dentsmen

By Mary McKeown

Plugging for their Third Year examinations three weeks ago, four members of Dentistry's last accelerated class decided to take advantage of the unusual opportunity offered by their ten-day February holiday and get away from the cold cruel Canadian winter. They wished to bask in the warm southern sunshine, to swim in the warm blue southern waters, and acquire sun-tans that would be the envy of their city-bound friends.

Operation Miami, therefore, was planned by Dentsman Bob Leuty of Toronto, owner of a 1929 model rumble-seater, and three fellow-Dents: Dave Boyd of Dominica, B. W. I., Fred Banford of New Westminster, and Keith Lindsay of Vancouver, B.C.

Not a single flat tire marred their thousand-mile journey through New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia. Mechanical difficulties, however, somewhat dimmed the pleasure of their journey, and caused them to cut short their objective after having reached Montgomery, West Virginia.

Now almost completely recovered from his experience, Lindsay outlined the jaunt in an exclusive interview with The Varsity.

"When we left Toronto Monday morning (Feb. 18) the temperature was about zero," he said. "We were all covered up with blankets, etc., as the car was a pretty open affair, but we thought about the warm southern breezes, and that helped to keep us warm."

They arrived at Wheeling, West Virginia, on Monday, and continued their journey to the south the next day. The balmy breezes, however, were still to come. Breakdown No. 1, the condenser, occurred about five miles from Parkersburg, West Va., after dark on Tuesday evening, when the car stopped dead in the pouring rain. After some time, a passing motorist towed them into town where they spent the night.

Wednesday and a new condenser brought them into Charleston, where their horseless carriage developed the ague, in addition to its now embarrassingly noisy cough.

"We created a great sensation whenever we drove down a street," commented Lindsay. "Everybody turned to look when they heard us coming. Whenever we went to a garage, the men just looked at us and shook their heads."

After fifteen hours of labour on the Dents' part, the car struggled onwards, but after thirty miles broke down completely and professional advice had to be summoned.

By this time, the quartet had reached Montgomery, West Va., and as it was then Thursday afternoon, they realized that Miami was out of the question, and changed their plans accordingly.

While in Montgomery, they spent two nights in jail (at their own request) as the town offered no more suitable accommodation. New parts for the car were being brought in from two outside points by bus and train. But the bus involved got into its own difficulties and the car parts were lost in the resultant shuffle. Not until Saturday were the boys able to start on their return journey.

This time the goal was Morgantown, West Va., where they hoped to see a basketball game at the University. However, after travelling through the mountains all day, the car gave up the ghost once more about thirty miles from their objective. This time they abandoned the car and hiked to the nearest farmhouse, where they spent the night, sleeping in an antique bed, which, they were told, had been brought all the way from England many years ago.

Sunday morning, the farmer, who was something of a mechanic himself, towed the car back to his house. By this time it had started to snow. The universal joint was broken, but the farmer learned that a useless car of similar make was lying in another farmer's yard some two miles up the tracks. Banford and Lindsay were elected to make this journey, which included a trestle bridge, by flashlight through the snow.

"We could hear trains coming all the time!" they confess.

When they finally reached the wreck, they were forced to turn it over to detach the universal joint, which they brought back. Still by flashlight, they repaired their jalopy.

After a second night at the farmer's house, they bade farewell to his pretty daughter, and drove up through Morgantown, and Pittsburgh to Erie, Pa. By this time resources were running low, and their time had more than run out.

Tuesday brought the last day of their journey and their final breakdown, No. 5, at Dunkirk, N.Y., where they were told that the coil, condenser and points were worn out. This repair job left them with about a dollar apiece.

As an anti-climax, the customs officials nearly tore the car apart to assure themselves that the Dents were not smuggling anything across the border. The weary travellers pulled into Toronto at 2 a.m. Wednesday morning.

"I had four cents in my pocket then, and that didn't cover the late registration fine," Lindsay said.

They had not been able to bask in the warm southern sunshine, to swim in the warm blue southern waters, or to acquire sun-tans that would be the envy of their city-bound friends. They did acquire fine cases of wind-burn, more or less heavy colds, and a carefully-cultivated tinge of southern accent.

They feel, moreover, fully qualified as first-class Ford mechanics, a talent they consider will stand them in good stead after graduation, should they ever run out of patients.

Sermon Re Herman

About once in a decade a band appears that makes jazz history. In the twenties Fletcher Henderson organized one of the first bands to play orchestrated music; in the thirties there was Benny Goodman who popularized swing and introduced new techniques and ideas. Bridging the thirties and forties Duke Ellington's superb orchestra brought jazz to a musical climax. Today the spotlight is on the band which Toronto heard at the Queensway Ballroom last Friday night Woody Herman. Without a doubt this orchestra is now the finest on the continent, an done of the greatest of all time.

Back in '41 and '42 Woody fired his old Blues band en masse and took on a herd of relatively unknown names. First and foremost of these is Ralph Burns, pianist and arranger extraordinary. He styled the band on the playing extolled by trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie and altoist Charlie Parker. For want of a better name the style is called Be-Bop. It departs radically from the trite and played out groove into which the majority of bands have fallen.

Take tunes like Body and Soul or I Surrender. These numbers have been played, replayed and byplayed by every musician who can hold a horn, until everything that can be done to them has been done and nothing new has been heard for years.

Then along comes Dizzy Gillespie and says "Look here—I'm going to play that stuff differently. I'm gonna rip those chords to shreds and put ideas in there that've never been there before." And he does. And it's good. And pretty soon everybody is blowing it. But that's not all good. Because only a few have Be-Bop; Ralph Burns is one of them.

His brass harmony is wonderfully fast, weird, and exciting. For sheer power, technical brilliance and guts, they can't be beat. His saxophone blendings unite with rhythm and brass to produce unusual and forceful, but satisfying music.

Little wonder he was picked All-American arranger by Esquire.

But arrangements are not enough. You must have good men to play them. Here we have Saul Berman who stands out on trumpet—playing Be-Bop and most of the solo jazz in the section.

Pete Condolly is terrific for high stuff in the brass section and for playing sensation rip-trumpet on the codas of those high-riding Herman Specials. His trumpet playing seems to have become the trade mark of the orchestra.

Shorty Rogers, a young addition to the trumpet section, rounds out an already fine quintet.

Every great band is studded with great musicians. This one is no exception. Flip Philips was chosen by Esquire as the up-and-coming tenor saxophonist. This boy plays some of the softest, fine-toned tenor heard here in a long time. The story goes that at a jam session in New York he out played Coleman Hawkins and made the great Hawk sound childish. Maybe this is stretching the point a little too far, but nevertheless keep the name of Flip Philips handy, because he is one of the top men on his instrument and will be in the limelight often.

Woody Herman himself is no great shakes on clarinet. How anyone can class him with Benny Goodman or Artie Shaw, is beyond us, because he lacks all the finesse of tone and technique that distinguishes those other two artists. His best contribution to swing and to the band lies in his singing. On slow blues, jumpy rag-time tunes, or plain ballads he sings with a rich expression and eloquence, as evidenced in his vocalizing of the two extremes, Bells of St. Marys and Caledonia.

We could go on and write pages about the other dozen or so great men in the band.

We could rave about Bill Harris's gorgeous full-bodied trombone; about solos which are outstandingly interesting because of their subtlety and originality.

We could extoll the virtues of Chubby Jackson's powerhouse bass; of Red Norvo's vibraphone; of Don Lamond's skin pounding; of the entire rhythm section, which through beautiful precision and force drove the band to feverish and frantic heights.

We could, we say, do all this, but we won't for fear of running short of superlatives.

It will suffice to say that Woody Herman's band has marked another milestone on the road of swing progress.

Friday, March 15, the two top men on their instruments, as far as we are concerned, Teddy Wilson and Coleman Hawkins will be playing for a concert and dance at the Queensway Ballroom. We hope to see you there.

SID STARKMAN.

Red Cross Tests?

Anybody who takes swimming in the Hart House Pool may be wondering what these Red Cross tests are. Even those who are not should also be acquainted with the objects and the actual requirements. The Red Cross tests in swimming and water safety are designed to meet a very acute problem, namely, the pitiful lack of knowledge most Canadians have of swimming, and more important the use of those skills already acquired.

The central office has been the sponsor of this program, and it works through its provincial branches. These in turn will, by means of the multitude of Red Cross organizations throughout the Provinces, spread the program across Canada. This, therefore, is a NATIONAL effort!

The movement was born in the Committee on First Aid under the direction of Dr. R. W. I. Urquhart, early last spring. Since then it has been in the formative stages only, with plenty of ground work being accomplished by its many enthusiastic supporters.

There is a brief history of the movement. Now where does it fit into the University aquatic program? As most of you already know there are many able swimmers in our University, but at the same time, there is an appalling number of students who, if they are able to swim at all, are not competent to handle themselves safely in the water. The first goal then is to use these tests in an attempt to graduate students with a passable knowledge of water safety.

A secondary motive in using these tests is the fact that the University is supposed to produce the leaders of tomorrow, and this being a new movement, it will require leaders. From the Volunteer Instructor group some immediate leaders may be drawn, but a larger group may be expected, if the student body—those with an aquatic taste—get behind the effort.

The Red Cross has done a good job during the war. It is now turning to peace. It is only right that an organization which has contributed so much to this country in welfare work should expand in a new direction in the welfare field.

In that Canada is a country of lakes (pardon us—stray Westerners) every Canadian ought to be able to utilize this wonderful opportunity. Moreover, those who do take advantage of the abundant supply of swimming situations, should be thoroughly acquainted with the practises concerning their own personal water safety.

This should explain the ad appearing in the Varsity the last few days. Additional gen may be found on the Pool notice board. The season for swimming is fast approaching, so let's all get out and support a new and useful program.

Trin. B Pucksters Blank SPS V's 4-0

In a fast-breaking hockey game last night Trinity B's downed S.P.S. by a 4-0 count. But for S.P.S. goalie Shugg, the score would have been much higher as Trinity carried most of the play. In the latter part of the game S.P.S. led by Sargent began to press but the back-checking displayed by the winners kept the play in the Skule zone. Carter led the Trinity men with a brace of goals, the first coming after only ten seconds of play. Beattie also did some fine work, scoring one goal. In the late moments Trinity sought to add to their total but some fine saves by Shugg kept the score as low as it was.

Scoring summary:—

- 2.—Trinity, Carter :20
- 3.—Trinity, Beattie (Parker) :15:20
- 4.—Trinity, Kingston :23:33

NOTICE

All hockey and major Basketball managers please file their nominations for the All Star Interfaculty team at the Athletic office no later than Friday, March 8th, 1946.

Please be impartial!

On Saturday night, the Varsity Intercollegiate Swimming squad captured the Senior Intercollegiate swimming title. The meet, held in Kingston, saw the Blue swimmers battling against men from McGill and Queen's.

Feature of the event was the setting of a new 200 yr. breast-stroke record by Varsity's Al Marshall. Marshall, newly crowned Canadian breast-stroke titlist, swam the 200 yds. in 2:35.3 seconds, to cut 1.3 seconds off the previous record, set in 1939 by Clawson of Varsity.

The Varsity swimmers amassed a total of 44 points in the eight events, McGill placing second with 26, and Queen's winding up with 10 points.

The Blues placed first in all but two of the eight events, Quayle of McGill winning the 100 yd. free-style, and Athans, another Redman taking first spot in the diving.

Turnbull won the 50 yd. free-style for Varsity, while team-mate Teskey took the 440 yd. free-style. Another Blue, Macdonal, copped the 100 yd. back-stroke.

To top the meet off, the powerful Varsity relayers waltzed off with wins in the 200 yd. sprint relay, and the 300 yd. medley relay.

'Sophistaswings' And 'Old Moaner' Top Bill at Ajax

To Athletic Supervisor 'Buff' Horton and Recreational Director Harry Brock go the credit for the success of Ajax's first Athletic Night, held last night in Recreation Hall.

After opening numbers by a vastly-improved "Hot Jaxs" orchestra under the direction of Ted Snider, the guest speaker of the evening was introduced by 'Buff' Horton. After a typical 'Ted Reeve' speech on "Rugby Reminiscences" the popular coach assisted in a "Football Hot Stove" conducted by Roy Dillworth. Also in the discussion were Ted Morris and Warren Stevens.

The Dean Young Pennant was then presented by its donor to Res. 727, who won it by virtue of the highest intramural percentage in the past month.

Then came the high point of the evening as the Sophistaswings of Toronto put on a 100-minute show which had the boys screaming and stamping for encores. Ten talented men and 16 classy lassies put on their first show since all their former returned from overseas, some reappearing for the first time.

It was a really good show, typical of those which 'Buff' has lined up for the lads for the months to come. Next Monday night a basketball game between two of Toronto's best girls' teams, and April 1, another big athletic night with the 'Hit The Jackpot Revue'.

Med III Beaten 7-1 SPS I Move Ahead

School's First team moved ahead in the intramural hockey playoffs, as they defeated the Med. III sextet by a score of 7-1. Anderson and Simpson with two goals apiece, were the pick of the winners.

S.P.S. I.—(7)—Johnston (1); Forten; Morrish; Davis; Radcliff; Saunders; Martin (1); Anderson (2); McDonough (1); Simpson (2); Lawson.

Med. III.—(1) — Halliday (1); Clemes; Rota; Smith; Cochran; Ballantyne; Ricci; Bailer; Horan; Lowry; Kennedy.

Red and Black Win UC II Icemen Out

In the interfaculty hockey play-downs last night, Trinity A clinched U.C. II from further play by virtue of a convincing 7-1 win.

The Red and Black held the edge throughout in all departments, with goalie Doug Appleton making some nice saves. Trinity was able to capitalize with combination playing and run in an early lead against the rather disorganized U.C. squad.

The first Trinity score came at the :45 second mark, and six more followed at regular intervals until John Farmer notched U.C.'s only score of the game with six minutes to go.

Pete Dowbell and F. Huycke each countered twice to lead the Trinity offense while Aird played soundly on defense. Staley and Farmer were best for U.C.

- 1.—Trinity, E. Huycke (Gordon) :45
- 2.—Trinity, Gordon (Aird) :3:40
- 3.—Trinity, Dowbell (Frewer) 10:05
- 4.—Trinity, F. Huycke (Dowbell) :13:00
- 5.—Trinity, F. Huycke (Frewer) :19:55
- 6.—Trinity, Bolke (Higginbotham) :25:55

Toronto Gals 2nd In Badminton Tilt

The University of Toronto placed second in the two day intercollegiate badminton meet held in Kingston last week-end, with a total of six points. McGill took top honors with seven victories.

Joan Cannon, who won the singles II championship, and Judy Price represented Toronto in the singles badminton games. Mary Keir and Pat Patterson entered the meet as the Toronto doubles team.

The first postwar women's intercollegiate badminton tournament took the form of a round-robin series. Queen's placed third with a total of four. Western completed the scoring with a single tally. McMaster was not represented at the meet.

SOLICITING A PROMOTION

The Volleyball club held their last round table discussion last Saturday ... the main purpose of which was to find ways and means of raising their brain child from a secondary sport to the top position of basketball, hockey and badminton. That is, the club has progressed so far down the path of improvement that awards of T's and intercollegiate meets are warranted.

At the start of this year the grade of volleyball was of none too high a calibre. The high scores were evidence to prove the need of much better organization and practice. As the year progressed, as years are bound to do, so did the efficacy of the teams. Came the semi-finals, and the club was edified to discover that the girls on the floor knew what the game was all about ... and began to show a high grade of competition.

Thus the club members feel that the S.A.C. should include volleyball in the list of sports on the intercollegiate agenda, and allow the stars to wear T's on their Varsity blazers. In short, volleyball has come of age, and wants to enter the major sports stage.

The team to carry off the trophy shield this year is P.H.E. IA. Runners up were O.T. and Saints.

FOOTNOTE

Grad Problems

(Written as the result of numerous discussions with students, the following letter comes from a faculty member who asks, for what we consider adequate reasons, that his name be withheld—Ed.)
The Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:
With the recent expansion to eight pages, The Varsity has become no small newspaper. However, need it continue to be solely "the undergraduate newspaper"? We have on the campus a large graduate school. Could you not expand your masthead and policies to include their interests?

I would suggest that your news coverage might include events of special interest to this group. A feature of some university newspapers is the listing and reporting of special lectures and departmental seminars. This is not only very helpful to senior students but presents a more complete picture of our academic scene to all members of the University.

I would also suggest that there are a number of pressing problems for this group which need to be presented through The Varsity. For example, the problem of living accommodation for married students has been advertised this year. May I point out that this has been a pressing problem in the graduate school for many years with our authorities maintaining a mediaeval attitude, expecting complete student celibacy. Also, the University of Toronto is rather unique in possessing no residence, whatever, associated with its graduate school. Finally, do you know, sir, that women graduate students, with relatively few exceptions, are forbidden to obtain any meals on the campus.

"Vital Force"

The Editor, The Varsity.
Dear Sir:

The recent interest in the subject of Mechanism and Vitalism prompts me to offer the following view: Mechanistic philosophy, in attempting to explain the properties of the living organism, in terms of physical concepts, is condemned by some as being essentially materialistic. The opposing vitalist, who considers that the special nature of the living world requires the activity of an unknowable "vital force", is considered by such people to uphold the only opinion consistent with a non-materialistic philosophy. This may not be so.

One of the chief sources of confusion is the misconception that life, as defined by science, is any more than a physical state. The scientist defines the living as that which possesses a particular set of physical and chemical properties. Why he should not be allowed to explain the physical in terms of the physical is not too clear.

The vitalist comes in, however, and promptly puts a strange "vital force" to work altering and controlling the laws of chemistry and physics. For a stone or a cloud, these laws act quite well without such aid. The vitalist only finds vital forces in living matter. There is remarkably little evidence that physical laws act differently in living matter other than being more complex in their relationships.

The theologian usually requires a spiritual entity, a soul, to explain the purpose of life. Various, the soul is considered to be associated with matter in order to gain experience. It is said to be its lot to endure the encumbering flash into which it has "fallen" until it can cast it off again. (Yet the vitalist makes the soul master.) The living body, in this light, exists for the purpose of contact with the material world. It is reasonable to suppose that the imprisoned soul would learn its lesson far more rapidly without the power of governing the actions of the organism, except by such forces as the will, intuition, and conscience—which are certainly not vital forces, since life is quite common without them.

In giving control of the living to the spiritual force, the vitalist draws a very poor picture of spirituality. He degrades a divine thing to the level of the operator of a machine, and assigns to it very mundane tasks. These it does imperfectly for all the divinity which he will also insist upon.

The soul may be thought of in another way whereby its divine nature is not surrendered. It may be postulated as an entity for the sake of which life exists and to which impulses pass from the living organism which, in this way, provides contact with matter for the non-physical soul. The only departure here from the strict mechanistic view is the need for a bridge between the two. Each end of the bridge could be purely mechanistic. Experiments with mental telepathy may already indicate that the brain is in part a communicating organ. (In lower forms of life one would have to presume that the connection was of a less definite and somewhat different nature.)

Into this scheme, forces for which there is some evidence;—will power, intuition and conscience, fit without contradiction as the suggestions of the "all-wise spirit" to the autonomous organism. They may or may not be accepted. The presence of non-physical forces are not, however, portrayed as vital or essential to physical life.

The conflict between mechanistic thought and the non-materialist has become non-existent. No physical scientist need be outraged by this conception. The issue has become what it really is: a question of the purpose of life, not one of the nature of physical life which is all science concerns itself with. Anyone who feels no need for imagining non-physical purposes has only to consider himself a materialist and curl up with concrete facts. He is not compelled to revise the theologian's view, for example, but only to confine himself to a part of it. Physical science has no need to argue about non-physical realities.

Before the theologian takes this renegade from fact, the vitalist, to heart, perhaps he should reconsider. It is surely a more admirable soul which keeps to its pedestal rather than meddling in the mundane affairs of the liver and spleen.

Objectionable

The Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:
In The Varsity of March 1 appears the statement by Professor Thorsten Sellin that the present increase in crime may be accounted for by the fact that thousands of our youth have returned from overseas.

Whether true or untrue, personal or impersonal, the remark is an objectionable one for the professor to make, and equally objectionable for The Varsity to print. The implications are open to every kind of misunderstanding and misinterpretation.

—C. H. WILKINS, I Arts.

Last Laugh

The Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Sir:
I was just reading the editorial column of The Varsity, March 1, 1946. I believe it is a common failing of mankind to gloat over others' mistakes, especially, when one thinks one has endeavored to prevent the occurrence of the mistake.

Well, I read, and I gloated. Some two or three weeks ago, I wrote a letter to The Varsity which in effect denounced the policy of printing prejudiced, personal viewpoints. The letter, I might add, went, or must have gone by now, the way of most advertisements which adorn our front lawns and porches—to the nearest wastepaper receptacle. Who knows, this one might, too. Perhaps the reference, in "Champus Cat" the day after I had offered my profound thoughts of wisdom, to wit, "The Varsity editor has been accused of a narrow, prejudiced policy" un-to wit, was the reply to my aforesaid words of wisdom. If such was the case, the text of my letter was misunderstood. I did not mean to infer that The Varsity's policy was one of prejudice, but on the contrary, that it was too liberal in printing the prejudiced views of individual students which I am sure served no more useful service than to compel other students to retalliate with other prejudiced views in opposition to those of the party of the first part.

Well, someone, who can demand to be heard, by virtue of his prominence and the fact that he has been unjustly wronged by such prejudiced views, has brought you to the realization that it does more harm than good to entertain such liberal policy. To be more specific, my reference is to the current Varsity-Kirkconnell-Rosenthal issue.

I dare say that many of Varsity's Freshmen can recall that some 'irate parent' and an enterprising student had a long, hard-fought duel with words through the medium of The Canadian High News. Controversy on some slight topic soon lost its importance to the contestants as they engaged in personal views on each other's reasoning capacity. Had either of these people been an individual in the public eye, we might have had a preview of the V.-K.-R. issue.

I will not burden you with a complete repetition of my previous letter, but in the main I tried to emphasize that personal, prejudiced views which bring nothing but ridicule and possible lawsuits to the writer should not be printed. Such views should be reserved for friendly chats. What is a friend for if not for the purpose of receiving the pent-up steam which boils in the best of us. I suggest that current events and topical topics can be clearly aired in a special debates column which would exclude personalities.

The Varsity is not at fault singularly. It is very probable that numerous publications find themselves in embarrassing situations when they are held responsible for some contributor's remarks. Freedom of expression is a wonderful ideal to uphold, but when the result is that the person expressing himself becomes an object of ridicule and is threatened with a lawsuit, is it not better to save such a person from the consequences?

I know my views are subject to attack and if they are basically unsound, I would like to know it. At least I don't see the reason for the many feuds which we read about in 'Our Readers Write' column. I can't see it, at all!

Two New Albums

(The records reviewed in this column were made available through the courtesy of the Campus Record Bar, Spadina and Harbord.)

Victor's December and January releases have yet to make their appearance in Toronto's retail stores. Two of the February albums, however, have arrived. These are a recording of Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata with Artur Schnabel and one of Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto.

Neither of these albums is entirely satisfactory. The recording of the Beethoven sonata is much the better of the two, both technically and musically. Rubenstein's performance is dynamic in the extreme, and while this will no doubt increase its public appeal, I find the extremes over-emphasized. The sound is clear and strident, and accepting the fuzziness of the insides of Victor's discs as inevitable, the recording may be considered among Victor's best. The playing also may be considered good if one neglects the fact that the second movement sounds more like Chopin than Beethoven, and the third movement is twice as fast as I considered possible. Since Schnabel's recording is not generally available, this new recording takes first place amongst the current versions of the Appassionata.

The performance of the Bruch Concerto is by Menuhin and the San Francisco Orchestra under Monteux. The conductor's customary musicianship is unfortunately lost in the very poor recording. The sound of the orchestra is incorrectly placed in space. The engineers have placed the microphone too near the violin, thus capturing all the treaciness of Menuhin's playing and relegating Monteux's sobering interpretation to a faint background. Sides four and six of the album I heard were so noisy and scratched as to be unlistenable. What Victor hopes to gain by palming off such horrible recording on the public, I cannot guess. They cannot hope seriously to sell the album.

— PHILIP FREEDMAN

A Plug For The Pop

We know of people who treat Pop Concerts with disdain. They regard them as unnecessary exploitations of inferior music, dull evenings set aside for the purpose of trotting out orchestral warhorses, riding the old things ruthlessly, then relegating them to greener pastures marked 'encore material for symphony concerts'.

We are familiar with this conception, but would offer a suggestion. We would like to say to these people: study an instrument for a lifetime, learn to compose music of all kinds—then attend a Pop Concert. We should expect a high percentage increase of enjoyment, a perception freed of false ideas, of quack intellectualism. A little knowledge takes the ego out of criticism, and more knowledge develops an intelligent appreciation. The recent Pop Concerts have been well chosen and well arranged. We defy anyone to condemn the quality of the music performed.

Which brings us to last Friday's Pop Concert in Massey Hall. The program was attention-holding and varied, with an unexpected spot of colour in Cadman's Dark Dancers of the Mardi Gras, a fantasy for orchestra and piano with Mary Syme at the piano. The work is a striking mood-poem suggestive of the fantastic, Negroid conception of the Carnival. Victor Herbert's Musical Comedy Selections provided proof that good melodies never wear thin, and Mr. Mazzoleni's ever-present artistry lifted them from the sloughs of sentimentality. On the whole, the playing was exceptionally satisfying throughout the evening.

Guest artist Mary Syme played the Grieg Concerto in A minor, the one that people whistle. Her work is musically sound, but not inspired. Miss Syme's frequent engagements with the T.S.O. may possibly be explained by the fact that she follows the conductor's beat. Besides, she looks nice in a red dress.

Female Figures Featured In Piquant Poster Parade

What, we may well ask, is Hart House coming to?

There's a display of commercial art in the main corridor that's drawing more onlookers daily than the Art Gallery boasts all year.

The pin-up girl—not the photographed variety but the unnaturally curvaceous, bosomy, bathing-suited creation of an Esquire artist's airbrush—is this year's favorite election vote-catcher. The rows of posters, austere classified by committees, drop their austerity right there.

"That bit of paper she's clutching is a vote for Woolsis".

"Whatizname will get people like ME into Hart House."

The tie-in messages are unsuitable: the pictures unabashed eye-stoppers. An entirely different genre features such messages as "Whoozits is running for House"—the House being depicted as a slantroofed clapboard creation perched on a lonely backwoods eminence.

The House in question—poles removed from the Collegiate Gothic pile that has been the apple of officialdom's eye for so many years, is a strangely popular poster theme. At this writing it's been used at least three times.

Stacking up the current crop of posters against the scholarly gags of bygone seasons; the gracefully-unrolled scrolls, the Shakespeare quotations, the stained-glass windows shedding light on some candidate's virtues, one is conscious of a marked reversal of trend.

Presumably there is something to be said for it. The Varga Girls, at any rate, draw gasps of satisfaction, and encourage naughty speculations as the expanding line of posters stretches nearer and nearer the chapel.

The Varga Girls, yes. But outhouses . . . !

Gas Research

fects once an individual had been exposed to a gas.

The whole aim of chemists working on new and deadlier gases was to find a gas which gave no warning, in colour, smell, or immediate pain. Dr. Lucas and his associates devised detection papers to give warning of the slightest amount of spray droplets in the air. However most of their work concerned what to do once the gas had reached the person without a mask. Nearly every gas affects the eyes and usually causes blindness if treatment isn't given. Counteracting agents were discovered to bring relief to the eyes after they had been exposed to a gas. Research was also done on anti-toxins to aid the whole system in combating the poisonous gas effects.

"We always took precautions," said Dr. Lucas. "We knew what we were doing and no one was ever poisoned or seriously burned. Some poor unsuspecting animal was used in our experiments—not us!"

SPS V Gain Place In Semi-Finals As Jr. SPS Downed

SPS V continued their winning ways yesterday at the expense of their faculty-mates Jr. SPS who lost the game 34-40. The winners enter the semi-finals Thursday when they take on the undefeated 'Trin A team.

The highly-rated Juniors ran up against a brick wall in the form of their opponents zone and all through the game had to rely on set shots and quick breaks to even hit the backboard. Despite the fact that the Fiftys used the same five men for the major part of the game they were able to match and at times, to outdo the fast pace which Jr. SPS tried to set.

The contest was fairly rough with a total of 25 fouls being called. The Fiftys sank 10 out of their 18 free throws and the Juniors scored 6 in 14; a little cleaner play on the latter's part might have gained them the decision.

The V's front line was outstanding throughout and kept pumping shots at the backboard with the result that centre-man Shonk led the scoring parade with 14 points and wingmen Erlink and Fletcher had 10 each. Meschino, with 13, did his best to crack the zone by shooting from outside the keyhole but his Jr. School mates gave him support in grabbing rebounds or formulating plays.

SPS V—Shonk 14, Erlink 10, Fletcher 10, McNeil 3, McBride 3, McGaw, White, Jackson, Drahan.

Jr. SPS—Meschino 13, McLaren 6, Phillips 4, Jacobs 3, McReynolds 3, Blair 2, Marshall 2, Fitch 1, Liffen.

New Verse Volume Is Earle Birney's

Vancouver, Mar. 4.—(C.P.P.)—Former professor of English at the University of Toronto, Earle Birney is receiving more and more recognition in the realm of poetry. His collection "David and Other Poems" won the Governor General's poetry award in 1942 and now his second volume of verse, "Now Is Time" just published, has been received very favourably by the critics. This new book deals largely with war and Dr. Birney's war-time service well qualified him to write about the fighting man.

Dr. Birney graduated with honours in English from the University of British Columbia. After graduation he was successively a teaching fellow at the University of California and English instructor at the University of Utah and a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada at the University of London. He did some summer session instruction at UBC and after earning his M.A. and Ph.D. at the University of Toronto he became an assistant professor of English here in 1936 at University College.

His "David" was pronounced by one critic as "the best thing of its kind that I have seen in current poetry." An article of his, "English Irony Before Chaucer" appeared in a 1937 issue of the University of Toronto Quarterly and another article "The Beginnings of Chaucer's Irony" in a publication of the Modern Language Association of Canada.

Peace In Belief Says McGill Prof.

"The Old World Sailors who ventured centuries ago into the Atlantic without the aid of compasses used to say that they were operating 'by guess and by God,'" said Prof. George Kimble of McGill University, in an address to the student body in Convocation Hall on Sunday morning. The service was sponsored by the Varsity Christian Fellowship.

In contrast to the Old World sailors, the U.N.O. Conference is working only by chance; men want to depend on themselves, rather than on God, Prof. Kimble continued. "Jesus Christ promised a completely satisfactory solution to world affairs for those who would confess their own powerlessness to do good, and accept Christ as 'the way, the truth, and the life.'"

Jobs For Science Grads Wartime Restrictions Off

Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel lists of employment for graduating Science Students may now be consulted in the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, and in the Forestry and Applied Science Faculty Offices.

In previous years, in accordance with the Regulations respecting Science Students, the needs of the Armed Forces for potential technical officers were canvassed, and subsequently the Bureau circulated to the universities lists of accredited employers with whom graduating students might seek employment.

This year the restrictions regarding student employment are no longer in effect, and employers are free to contact students and vice versa. The list of openings available is intended to supplement direct contacts which have already been made between individual students and employers.

It is expected that there will be a limited number of openings for technical appointments in the Armed Forces; information in this regard will reach the universities through service channels, and graduating students interested should enquire through these channels at the university.

Present manpower requirements call merely for the notification by an employer after he has taken a technical person in his employment. Graduating students, therefore, require no permit to seek employment.

Possible openings of which the Board was notified up to February 25, 1946, are given in the list. Further openings will be incorporated in a supplementary list.

Protect Canada MacDonald Topic

"Cartels in Canada" is to be the topic of an address to the C.C.F. Club by Mr. Alex MacDonald, CCF Parliamentary Secretary. Mr. MacDonald, assistant to M. J. Coldwell, National CCF Leader, has been to the San Francisco Conference, has written numerous articles on this topic.

He will attempt to show how previous legislation has failed to protect the Canadian public against unfair and restrictive practices of international cartels, and domestic combines.

Also on the agenda is the election of officers for the next term.

"The Club is trying to arrange the long-awaited Political Forum of the four campus political clubs," said President Roy Clark, "and a report of the possibilities and progress to date will be given."

Deny Open Bars As Remedy For Local Liquor Vending

Last night's Robinette debating final on "Resolved that open bars will solve the present deplorable liquor situation" was won by last year's winning team of Telford Georges and Monty Simmonds opposing the motion.

The victors will meet the Portia Women's debating team winners at the next Red and White Night.

Said Harold Atin, II U.C., first speaker of the affirmative, "The present situation adds to the charm of drinking because forbidden fruit tastes best. The opening of bars will help solve the situation."

Monty Simmonds, III U.C., opening the debate for the negative, said, "Introduction of open bars would mean a casual acceptance of drink which, as is demonstrated in the States, results in increased consumption. This will lead to harm to the country's citizens."

"The problem lies not with moderate drinkers," said Andy Boas, II U.C., supporting the affirmative, "but with confirmed drinkers. The situation in Europe is a proof of why the system would work."

The last speaker, Telford Georges, III U.C., speaking for the opposition, said, "The opening of bars would tend to bring liquor to exactly the people who should not be drinking. It would offer definite encouragement to young people who otherwise might not have formed the attachment. It will cause an increase in crime among older juvenile delinquents, those between 19 and 21."

The winners were awarded silver, college-crested, cigarette cases.

Canada's Key King Scorns Movies And Boogie-Woogie

By Bob Henderson

The ISS may have an additional distinguished guest at its "All Varsity Revue" tomorrow night in the person of Oscar Peterson.

"I won't be able to play because of restrictions, but I'll do my best to get over and see part of your show," smiled the genial Oscar in reply to our invitation yesterday. And thus ended our interview with that remarkable gentleman.

It all began when, instead of the piano we discovered him practising his scales—on a toy flute (or Swinette as he called it).

"It's just a hobby," he explained.

"I acquired this job a couple of hours ago at the Promenade—to the tune of $17.91. I'm only kidding. I have to pad my expenses account so my business manager will give me enough to live on."

"Actually this thing only costs a couple of bucks. It's too bad though that kids don't go in for these things anymore. I can remember when I was five—we used to save our pennies and buy nickel flutes.

When we were ten we saved our nickels until we had maybe seventy-five cents; our mothers would see how badly we wanted one and they'd kick in another quarter and we'd buy a dollar flute. Maybe these things won't ever make anyone a flautist, or a sax or clarinet player, but they stimulate that first interest in music."

Oscar began playing piano when he was five, under the teaching of his father. He got his big start in music when at 13, he won one of Ken Sobel's amateur contests and toured the country with one of his units. At 15, he turned professional with his own 15 minutes radio show from Montreal.

Up until two years ago he played with several small bands around Montreal. Now he plays with Johnny Holme's Orchestra, has had offers from Warner Bros., several radio shows south of the border, and also several American name bands.

Oscar hates boogie-woogie and jazz, but he likes and plays both fast and slow swing. He is best known for his trio work with Russ Dufort on drums and Bert Brown on bass.

"Russ will be playing with me at Massey Hall on Thursday but Bert will be unable to make it.—By the way, can I sell you a ticket?—Bob, get out those tickets quick—we'll have one customer anyway!"

Oscar's best-selling records are 'Louise', 'Blue Heaven' and 'I've got Rhythm.' He likes the latter best although the first has the best sales record.

SMITH EXCHANGES KEEP ON IN FALL

For Women In Second Year Of Several Honor Courses

Deans Handle Details

The exchange of students between Toronto and Smith College has been extended for the next year, and requirements for eligibility have been announced.

Girls in any of the four arts colleges in the second year honor courses in Groups A and B may apply for their junior year at Smith College. These courses include Ancient and Modern languages, Fine Art, Law, Modern History, Music, Philosophy, Philosophy (English or History option), Political Science and Economics, Psychology and Sociology. If they complete their courses at Smith College approved by the departments concerned, the year will be accepted as the equivalent of their Third Year at this university. The students will be admitted to the Fourth Year of their courses upon their return in the fall of 1946.

It is probable that only those students who obtain at least Second Class Honours at the final examination of their second year will be ultimately recommended for exchange, but the committee in charge is anxious to have, by the middle of March, the names of all girls who are interested in the exchange, and who would, if accepted, go to Smith College for the work of the Third Year.

The financial problem is slight, since Toronto students will pay their full fees, residence and tuition, to the University Bursar, and the Smith girls will pay their full fees to the treasurer of Smith College.

Any girls who are interested in the exchange should go to the respective College Deans of Women for further information.

On exchange at Smith this year are Mary McIntosh, Ruth MacDougald, Margaret Whittey, and Allison Kemp, all of University College. Here at Toronto are Annie Auerbach, Sally McDevitt, Phoebe Taylor, and Barbara Tomb. They will all be glad to answer any questions regarding the exchange.

List Candidates For Lit. Executive

At an open meeting of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society last night the following nominations for office were received:

For Honorary President: Mr. Sydney Hermant, by acclamation.
For President: C. Guild, by acclamation.

Literary Director: F. Garner, by acclamation.

Athletic Director: M. Michasiw; J. MacKenzie; J. Fine.
Social Director: L. Bochner; D. Smith.

Publicity Director: B. Carley; A. Rose; N. Rainwasser.
Treasurer: W. Knowlton; M. Stitt.

Secretary: B. Langley; M. Brody.
Fourth year President: M. Shuklik; G. Ewins; B. Wilkes; P. Grader.

Third Year President: J. Palmer; K. Robinson; H. Atin; A. Bennett.
Second Year President: W. Belfry; D. Robinson; A. Marshall; M. Yolles.

Secretary Treasurer — Fourth Year: M. Fremes (accl.)

Have You The Old Feeling? That's Spring That Is Son

By Shirley Holman

"Robins are a sign of spring, Slush, exams, and everything!"
Seen a robin yet? No? Get your nose out of that thesis—and look around you—because a few campus Sherlocks are way ahead of you. They've seen a robin, sure enough. "And" they sigh, "Ain't it wonderful?"

Spring is just as nostalgic as ever. We may not take sulphur and molasses and tote a bumbushoot and mackintosh—but we sure can still appreciate that "old feeling". Have you taken your best girl for a walk in the country yet? Have you taken your rod and reel out of hook? Have you brought your summer underwear out of mothballs? No! Say brother, it's Spring!

Did you know that the earliest robin ever seen in Toronto, landed in on January 1, New Year's Day! Well, we're a little late this year, but the vanguard is with us, so keep your eyes peeled.

The large and imposing textbooks say our robin is not a real robin at all. He is a "turdus migratorius migratorius". Ah, but we know different. Why a robin is a clear blue sky, warm sunlight across your back, baseball in the back lot, curtains blowing out the window, a crazy new hat, a kid dawdling through the puddles on his way to school, and, oh yes—Exams!—better start dusting off the books!

Friday Elections For Vic Classers

Don Paisley was elected assistant treasurer and Jack Pearce was elected assistant social director of the Victoria College Union for the session 1946-47. Paisley and Pearce won by close margins in the recount over Jack Morgan and John Teeter respectively.

The recount was necessitated by very close balloting in the election Friday.

Elections for class executives will be held this Friday in Alumni Hall. At the same time students in third year honor courses and second year Pass will choose the holders of the men's and women's senior stick, and the men's and women's athletic sticks. Nominees for the stick were chosen last Friday when the V.C.U. executive was elected.

GLASS FALLING?

The barometer mystery deepens. Yesterday The Varsity pointed, amid some mystification, to the odd-oddly odd yet to turn up in the University's Lost and Found receptacles: a six-inch aneroid barometer being held for its owner in the S.A.C. Office.

Yesterday the office staff confessed to renewed embarrassment. Last noticed during a summer cleanup, the barometer has disappeared.

Substation 29, Campus Post Office Discovered Nestling in Simcoe Hall

Did you know that the University is practically a self-contained unit? It has its own police force, power plant, its own president and even its own post office. Students who are so worn out after a lecture or a lab that they haven't the energy to walk to the nearest post office, can trot down to Simcoe Hall, turn to the left and there all the advantages of a regular postoffice are ready and waiting.

Out-going mail causes no problem. It's the letters that come into the postoffice that give the gals down there, gray hairs. Every day a few letters come in addressed to "Miss Mary Smith, U. of T." for example, and it is necessary to trace the whereabouts of Miss Mary Smith. This involves looking through all the faculty lists in the Directory. The postoffice has many other functions than that of handling letters. Sub-station number 29 in Simcoe Hall fulfills all the qualifications of a main postoffice except that it has no Post-Office Savings Account. But you can send money orders, register a letter or insure a parcel. The Post Office even delivers mail. Interdepartment mail, not stamped, is delivered twice daily on stamped, is delivered twice daily on two routes which cover the campus. The postoffice officials have only one plea... when you write a letter to anybody on the campus, please make sure of the address and then put it on the letter.

On Student Government (3)

We intend to wind up this desultory series of notes on an enormously broad topic with a few words on elections and electioneering. Elections and electioneering, as everyone knows, are the two manifest symptoms of what is proudly called democracy. They are also the source of much sand in democratic wheels.

The fiction that one man really stands for a thousand others and speaks with a collective universal voice is gradually passing, though it lingers in our official text-books. When a campaign is fought over real issues, with voters and candidates drawn up on opposing sides, then a majority vote will generally represent endorsement of a candidate empowered to voice a majority view. But once let a committee be securely ensconced in office, and let a new controversial issue come up, and short of a referendum the committeemen have nothing to offer but personal views. They cannot pretend, although by an understandable confusion they frequently do pretend, to speak for their constituents.

In other words, the elective, or as it is falsely called, "representative" system, really amounts to selecting a committee to take decisions. There can be by its very nature no question of the committee "representing student opinion", whatever that may mean.

This being the case, and a democracy under the elective machinery really being an oligarchy whose oligarchs are shuffled annually, unusual care in voting and unusual candour in campaigning are prerequisites of a satisfactory government.

Since you are going to give your fortunes for a year into the hands of a committee, you had better be careful that it is a good committee. You should not elect the man with the hearty voice and the glad hand under the impression that friendship will be a basis for control: for once the committee is in office there is next to no control. You should elect the man who best understands the business he is about.

Now it is obvious to anyone who watches the personnel of student executives over a period of years, that certain people are perennial winners of elections. The yearly lists on the walls of the U.C. Junior Common Room, for example, stretching back into the middle of the last century, exhibit again and again the phenomenon of certain students holding office three or four consecutive years, rising, perhaps from Assistant Secretary-Treasurer to President, or from President of the First Year to President of the Fourth Year.

There exists, in short, a self-perpetuating clique: marked by the requisites of electoral victory which are roughly a ready smile and a hearty voice. What possible connection these characteristics have with executive competence is not plain. We imagine the meaner sort of voter is flattered into complaisance, and the more intelligent is doped with the belief, outlined above, that friendship will be a guarantee of representation.

People get, on the whole, the sort of government they deserve, which is perhaps the best that can be said for the representative system. The guarantee of good government is for the voters, by an increase of awareness, to increase their deserts. Remembering that they are surrendering themselves wholly to the committee they propose to elect, students should nominate candidates whom they would be willing to trust with any personal mission, and then vote for those candidates whether the ready smile flashes or not. A man may be unsmiling because he is morose: it is often forgotten that he may also be unsmiling because he has his mind on his job.

At university, it is often said, one may learn the functioning of democracy and thereby be prepared for citizenship. It should be added that what democracy in action has to teach is commonly unpalatable; and that true education is marked by acquaintance with the taste of reality and an instilled willingness to make the best of a bad job without delusions that it is a good job.

— W. H. K.

To be elected today are some forty men who will have the destinies of The House in their trust: the House whose sloping roof and quaintly-shaped windows enclose a general odor of sanctity. For the guidance of voters and candidates alike we publish an outline of several main traditions of The House.

Most ancient tradition of all is the May Day memorial service held annually at the bricked-up door near the Chapel. Bricked up behind this door in the year 1227, with a pitcher of water and a Tuck Shop hot-dog for nourishment, was the wife of an early Warden of The House who insolently and in defiance of an edict of the Board of Stewards appeared in the Great Hall without her head on.

Heart of the service, attended by all Occumite-men in hangman's garb, is the reading of a Writ of Excommunication by the Warden and Comptroller in alternate stanzas. The Warden then takes the Comptroller's left heel in his right hand and spins him around three times, while Committeemen chant the Gaudeamus Igitur and the Secretary juggles three cigarettes.

A slip-up in 1793 whereby the Warden of the day mistakenly took the Comptroller's right heel in his left hand resulted in the Chess Room being haunted for ninety consecutive nights.

So old that nobody can recollect its origin is the ceremony of the Burning of the Posters in early fall. On the appointed day one member from each committee gathers secretly in the room back of the theatre and the election posters of ten years previously are burned in an enamelled pot. At a signal, the Secretary files in, seeks the committeemen severely according to a prescribed ritual, and snatches from the pot three posters which are then added to the permanent collection. The ashes of the remainder are then sprinkled upon the Taddle by the Hall Porter.

The opening day of the Michelmas term in the year preceding a Leap Year sees the Renewing of the Hall Porter's Tooth-Pick, a ceremony originally instituted as a guarantee of the Porter's Feudal Rights. The first step is a conclave in the Tuck Shop Annex at which the Warden and the Comptroller draft a verse petition of 190 rhymed lines to be presented to the Board of Stewards, praying that a new tooth-pick be obtained for the Hall Porter.

When this is read at the next Board meeting, the Chairman raises the furious protest drawn up in 1977 and recently translated out of the Low Dutch into Old French owing to a shortage of Chairmen with Dutch accents. Two committeemen with staves and partisans then batter down the oak door and rush the Chairman to the open window, where he discharges his revolver three times towards the sky as a signal for his tribe to gather round him. His tribe having become extinct in 1690, no one appears, and the motion of granting a new tooth-pick is then passed with one dissenting vote, traditionally cast by the Comptroller.

The members then vest themselves for the Processional, which consists of a grand march three times around the ground floor corridor, detouring on the second tour to wade through the pool. All this time the Tooth-pick is carried aloft by the Secretary of the Knitting Committee on a velvet cushion, and torches are passed from hand to hand while the Warden sings a prescribed catch or glee, and rubs the secretary down with a bear's-hide towel.

Drawing up finally at the Hall Porter's Desk, the Processional concludes with the presentation of the tooth-pick and a short speech of acceptance, whereupon the Porter chins himself three times on a portable Gothic Arch as a sign of freedom, while the Caretaker dries out the Processional Robes in a Great Hall oven and hangs them in the S.C.M. Office until the next occasion.

All-Varsity Revue Opens Shows Cream of Campus

The "All-Varsity Revue" opens a two-night stand in Convocation Hall to-night in aid of the International Student Service campaign to raise funds for needy universities and students throughout the world.

Featuring acts from every campus show to be presented this year, the Revue sets a precedent for Varsity undergraduate presentations. For the first time in history, undergraduates have crossed faculty boundaries to combine for one show.

E. Ross (please hurry up with your Torontonensis material) McLean will be master of ceremonies. Featured comics will be Alec Siegel (master-mind behind the U.C. Folies) and Don Harron (of red flannel and Bob fame). Whitey Belshaw (Skule-Nite impresario) and his sensational 16-piece swinget will supply the music.

Jim Templeton and Gord Allison of S.P.S. waved whips and slung slide-rules to transform the bare platform into a stage big enough for the dance routines. Foot-lights, spots from the balcony, seven microphones, a public address system, all had to be installed before staid Convocation Hall could be made into a music-hall.

An ISS spokesman said that a few tickets are still available in faculty rotundas. No seats are reserved; the doors are open at 8:00; Belshaw's boys take off at 8:20; the show starts at 8:30.

Services To Mark Beginning of Lent

The beginning of Lent will be commemorated by afternoon services in Wycliffe College Chapel. Arranged by the Students' Christian Movement the services will be held at 4:15 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Professor D. W. Hay of Knox College will open the series on Wednesday followed by Dr. J. H. Davies of Emmanuel College. Ven. Archdeacon J. B. Fotheringham will close the series on Thursday.

Each speaker will set forth some aspect of atonement. Entitled "The Church Speaks for Today" it is understood that the approach of the speakers will be modern and practical.

Crocuses Blooming At Trinity College

Trinity men, our horticultural spies report, are considering the lilies of the field in earnest these days: despite slush, mud, and heavenly gloom, yellow crocuses are abloom on the college lawn.

This is said to be one of the earliest dates on record for the appearance of these spring flowers: an appearance that on many occasions has been followed by a blizzard.

Our Architects Are Heretics?

By Bob Cooke

A new residence for St. Mike's, a women's "Hart House", a legitimate theatre for Toronto, a hospital, apartment buildings, an Art Gallery for Hamilton, a broadcasting studio and new buildings for Wycliffe College... All these things are on the draughting board in the School of Architecture.

The thesis work of fifth year Architecture students these drawings are one of the requirements for a degree in Architecture. Although the drawings will probably never be used for the construction of these buildings, the Architects are doing them as if they were out serving an actual client.

First a set of requirements is drawn up and these must be approved by the faculty as they would by a client. Taking the part of a client the faculty then requires that a set of drawings showing what the building would look like and working drawings for the contractor to follow. Here there is a slight variation from standard practice. The undergraduate is required to make working drawings of only part of the building to save time. The drawings he makes are sufficient to show that he would be able to make a complete set for his "client".

These thesis drawings are the culmination of their studies. The drawings, though to the untrained eye it is not apparent, are based upon the lectures and labs of all their undergraduate years—lectures and labs stressing the "Modern School of Architecture" with its severe simplicity and emphasis on functionalism.

The work of Joe Storey, who made drawings for buildings to replace the present Wycliffe College, are perhaps the best example of the differences that exist between the "Modern School of Architecture" and their predecessors. His proposals for the kind of buildings that should replace the red brick theological college just north of Hart House have aroused much comment in both clerical and lay circles.

I'd make a wonderful automobile factory", commented one building contractor when shown the drawings.

Mr. Storey himself thinks that Gothic arches and other features of ecclesiastical architecture are symbols of the world of yesterday. Christianity, he believes, is a guide for living, based on the commandments, and as such is very practical and functional. Why then, he argues, should the church buildings not be the result of a functional plan, with use as their main object and modern plans as the basis of their design. In fact the design of church buildings should be in keeping with our mode of life and not a symbol of another age.

He published his arguments and several drawings in the Wycliffe College magazine, The Cap and Gown, last spring. The "Cap and Gown" goes to graduates all over the world and from many of them comments were received on his plans. The comments ranged from absolute agreement to charges of heresy.

And what were the drawings that would arouse such comments? They represent a building rather similar to an apartment building of the most modern design, or perhaps a very modern hospital, with large windows flush with an almost perfectly smooth wall surface. Perhaps describing the buildings as large rectangular brick boxes with large glass windows would be the best way of portraying them. Even the chapel, which would be separate from the main buildings but connected to them by a covered passage, would be a brick box with large windows. Their very simplicity would make the buildings harmonious with their surroundings and the large windows would mean that the rooms were well lit and would not have that cell-like atmosphere so prevalent in most residences. The simplicity of the chapel seems to increase its dignity.

These drawings will probably be used in the design of the new buildings when Wycliffe rebuilds, but they are an example of the kind of work the architects of tomorrow will turn out. The designs which up until now have been used mostly in factories and apartments, and have incidentally been a great success, will gradually take over all fields of building.

And what about the scornful reference to a resemblance existing between these drawings and automobile factories?

"Well", says Mr. Storey, "the automobile factory is designed with an accent on convenience and efficiency of operation. Who shouldn't modern homes and schools and churches follow this lead?"

Radar Research and Crew Training War Tasks of Physics Department With Million Dollar State Grant

By John McRae

Training thousands of men for specialized posts in the armed services, perfecting one of the greatest inventions of the war—the proximity fuze, invention of a machine to manufacture oxygen in an airplane, these were the projects carried on by the Department of Physics during the war. These were some of the things for which the National Research Council of the Dominion Government granted nearly a million dollars to the Physics Department.

Much of its work has been publicized; much is still secret. But whether publicized or secret the record of the Physics Department in its aid to the war effort is an enviable one.

Training of Personnel and Research were the two main jobs which the Department of Physics carried on for the Dominion Government during the war. Over half a million dollars was granted by the Government to finance the training program and over a quarter of a million to aid in research. Most of the training was in radio work and the research covered the fields of oxygen for high altitude flying, the proximity fuze, radar, problems of chemical warfare and many other projects some of which are still on the secret list.

Radar Training

The teaching all started from a diploma course in Aerial Navigation in the University in which the Department was teaching all the physics including radio work. Since all the facilities were at hand it seemed natural to the Physics Department that they should start teaching as soon as possible. Accordingly in the summer of 1940 the first course in Radar Training was begun. As the boys in this course were not yet in any of the services the Riverdale Kiwanis Club paid all their living expenses.

In the following courses the Government took over and all expenses were paid. This was the most specialized of all the courses; none of the secrets of radar were taught but all the theory behind it and training in the use of its complicated equipment, which is far different from any other radio apparatus.

Altogether about 125 men went through this course. Although officially part of the Canadian Navy most of them were lent to the Royal Navy where they took responsible posts on some of the largest ships of the British Navy. Men trained in this department served on the battleships George the Fifth, the Queen Elizabeth, the Warspite, the aircraft-carriers Victorious, Illustrious, Implacable, the cruiser Exeter and many other ships.

Admiral Frazer, Commander of the British Fleet in the Pacific said that he couldn't understand it but nearly all his good radar officers seemed to come from Canada. The present head of radar in the Canadian Navy is Commander Burchell, an early graduate of this course.

The next course was one for Naval Ratings. It was equivalent to the present First Year Science Course. These men were taught the fundamentals of physics and the mathematics connected with anti-submarine work. Then the British called for 3000 radio technicians as soon as possible.

These men were to aid the radar officers in keeping the radar equipment in good order and know how to make emergency repairs on all radio equipment. Lasting 16 weeks, this course was run right ahead through Winter and Summer. When it finished 2,500 men had been trained here, one fifth of all those given similar training in Canada.

During the early days of the war the call-up age in Canada was 20 years. This left a gap of at least a year between the time most men left High School and the time they joined up. It was on the suggestion of Professor E. F. Burton, Head of the Department of Physics, to the Government at Ottawa, that the Canadian Army Courses were begun.

Under this arrangement men were permitted to join the Army at a younger age and spend the first year in University before they went on Active Service. The courses they took were the same as the present M & P and First Year Engineering Courses. There were two of these courses, but as they lost their point when the enlisting age was lowered, they were stopped.

No Wild Ideas

In the field of research the department took the stand that they would follow the suggestions of the Government and not try to follow up any wild ideas presented to them by every inventor who had what he thought was the weapon of war.

The first suggestions came when the British Government sent Professor R. H. Fowler, of Cambridge University to Canada to look over the possibilities of research in Canadian Universities. At that time the problems of supplying oxygen to pilots at high altitudes had not been worked out, and the Army wanted a radically different fuze to set off their shells when they neared the target.

The Department went to work on both these problems.

Professor J. O. Wilhelm was in charge of the oxygen research. Here they wanted a portable liquid-air making machine, weighing less than 900 pounds which could be installed in the large bombers. After this machine was perfected Prof. Wilhelm joined the R.C.A.F. and was Director of Operational Research for three years. The work on the Proximity fuze, as the "fuze with a brain" came to be called was largely an international affair.

The Department worked in close co-operation with Washington, but the final battery which charges the tiny radio set making up the fuze was perfected in the McLennan Laboratories by Prof. Arnold Pitt of that Department who recently left the University to work for Massey-Harris.

Perhaps the greatest work of the fuze was done during the Buzz-bomb attacks on Britain. Four weeks after they came into use 74% of all buzz-bombs destroyed were shot down by guns using proximity fuze shells. As soon as the shells came within 70 feet of the buzz-bombs the delicate radio mechanism would start working; the shell would explode and the bomb would burst harmlessly in the air. The arrangement for self-destruction of these shells, still a secret process, was for the most part worked out in this Laboratory.

Unfortunately most of the other work carried on is still secret and the Department is under orders from Ottawa not to reveal any of the details. However many other fields of research were covered and

The Ezra Pound Case

The present issue is by now several months old but, as persistent echoes indicate, not yet dead. What I have to say has been said before and better, but I consider no voice lost, however weak, in reinforcing the general clamour.

The American editors of Random House have overruled compiler Conrad Aiken and excluded the poems of Ezra Pound from their forthcoming Anthology of Famous English and American Poetry.

Random House editor Saxe Commins supplies the reason in the November 25 issue of PM: "Random House is not going to publish any fascist. As a matter of fact, we don't think that Ezra Pound is good enough, or important enough to include. If we thought he was, we might have carried him anyway. We just don't think he is."

Upon pondering the logical structure of this pronouncement, we can disentangle two ideas from the confusion in Mr. Commins' mind. First, Ezra Pound is not a good poet. Second, Ezra Pound, as a fascist, is unfit for publication.

In answer to the first assertion, I am content to let the poetry speak for itself. If it fall on ears born deaf, it will have been just as effective persuasion as any critical analysis of mine or, rather more authoritatively, of T. S. Eliot. The more difficult appreciation of historical influence, I likewise despair of generating from the vacuum of its absence. I can only state, dogmatically, that modern poetry, good modern poetry at any rate, Eliot included by self-admission, largely derives, directly or indirectly, from the poetry of Ezra Pound. Any intelligent critical work on the subject will say the same.

* * *

That a fascist should not be printed has, in the present issue, more of a case. Pound is undeniably a fascist. But even if he had not been spared probable conviction as a traitor by the pronouncement of his insanity, I should still consider his political colour quite irrelevant.

Another Random House editor, I am told, has defended the suppression on the grounds that Pound's poetry is IM-PLICITLY the work of a man evolving toward and finally reaching fascist beliefs. I concede here an element of truth which is confirmed in the persistent anti-Semitism of some of the late CANTOS. But the MERCHANT OF VENICE is also anti-Semitic. If Shakespeare or Pound corrupt us, ours is the weakness. The mind that cannot dissociate aesthetic delight from the need to be, action and passion, a candle in the wind is emotionally beyond further corruption.

In the following fragments from one of the poems specifically excluded from the Random House anthology, you may investigate for yourself the technical inadequacies that make it a "bad" poem and the subtle undertones of hate that speak the incipient fascist:

At fourteen I married My Lord you,
I never laughed, being bashful.
Lowering my head, I looked at the wall.

Called to, a thousand times, I never looked back.

At fifteen I stopped scowling.
I desired my dust to be mingled with yours

For ever and for ever and for ever.
Why should I climb the look out?

At sixteen you departed
You went into far Ku-to-yen, by the river of swirling eddies,
And you have been gone five months.
The monkeys make sorrowful noise overhead.

The paired butterflies are already yellow with August
Over the grass in the West garden:
They hurt me, I grow older . . .

The VARSITY

By Joyce Pratt and Eleanor Dickson

Way back 25 years ago President Falconer issued a statement concerning the needs of the University. According to this report the amount required for the erection of buildings was $4,150,000 divided as follows:

- Residence for U.C. Men—$450,000.
- Addition to Library—$300,000.
- Heating Plant—$300,000.
- Women's Athletic Building—$250,000.

With reference to the Women's athletic building there were periodic articles in The Varsity in 1920-21 telling the latest activities raising money for the new building. The women's fraternities held dances and sold theatre tickets with great fervour and enthusiasm in the hope that soon they would have the required sum for their new dream building.

"The more tickets sold the sooner we will add another magnificent building to boast of and to point out to envious visitors."

This gives an idea of how real this women's building had become to Varsity women. Edith Henderson—the chairman of the U.C. Buildings Committee—reviewed building plans of 1920 in an editorial of The Varsity.

This is what she said about the "Women's Hart House": "Though we have apparently gained nothing through the Commission there seems every prospect that the gymnasium building for all the women of the university will be a reality in the very near future. This gymnasium building is to be built and equipped, we believe, by the Board of Governors from funds in their hands, and there will be no appeal to private individuals for subscriptions in connection with it. It will be for the use of all the women of the University whether in Arts, Science, Medicine or to whatever college they may belong."

Thus spake The Varsity of 1920.

The President's report of 1944 has listed some familiar items:

- Residence for U.C. Men—$500,000.
- Extensive additions to central library—$950,000.
- New central heating and power plant—$1,000,000.
- Women's Athletic Building—$500,000.

We're curious about 25 years from now.

a particular tragedy to those who believe great literature must inevitably be an ally of freedom. Not only because the poet turned to fascism, but particularly because these publishers have deprived readers of poetry which is in the final analysis beyond all politics and even beyond Pound himself. We may hope for writers who will strengthen the ideals we approve. But we can neither censor nor legislate them into being

Alberta Presents Original Drama

Edmonton, Mar. 4.—(CUP)—An original play, written by Gwen Pharis and directed by Sidney Risk, will be presented by the University of Alberta on Mar. 4, 5, and 6. This play, "Stampede", will mark a step forward in Canadian theatre for we have here the makings of true Canadian drama in both the creative and interpretative fields.

"Stampede" is written, directed, produced, and acted by Western Canadian students. The author is a U. of Alberta graduate and the director, a graduate of U.B.C., is on the University of Alberta Fine Arts Staff. The story centres around the first Calgary Stampede in 1912 and the last act takes place right at the stampede grounds. In it are to be found all the elements which characterize the famous Calgary Stampede—the colorful crowds, policemen, Indians, and salesmen. Many of the characters are based on actual Western personalities such as Nigger John Ware, Chief Whitecalf, Jim Carson and others. Musical settings and original orchestrations and arrangements of early folk tunes are being tackled by the University Music Department and these will be presented between acts.

renowned journalist and war correspondent, is prepared to answer any question a veteran can ask concerning rehabilitation on his new weekly radio program. Entitled "Greg Clark" the show is presented Thursdays at 7.45 p.m. over the CBC Trans-Canada Network.

CAMPUS JUMPS

Varsityites are having plenty of chances to dig the righteous of late, both on the campus and away from it. The Herman-Herd has come and gone: Oscar Peterson is in town now, and Hawk and Teddy Wilson are coming.

At home, we've had 2 performances of the U. of T. Campus Cats, to suggest a name for the as-yet-nameless 7-piece group. The boys did a swell job, and we hope that last week's concert was but the first of a long series of campus clam-bakes. Moreover, the skule elections on Friday supplied us, via sound-trucks, with a wonderful selection of the good old swingclassics. (We'd hate to think that any skuleman's vote was influenced by such delightful music.) All in all, we've had a good week, from a jazz viewpoint.

DIGGIN' THE DISCS

Now, to latch on to a few of the current, and not-so-current discs. Krupa's latest Columbia doubling is Hop, Skip and Jump and Yesterdays. First is poor music, but with a good arrangement and nice reed section work. Anita O'Day does her usual good job of vocalizing. Yesterdays is a first class tune, but isn't up to much, even with Charlie Ventura featured. It is a confused sort of arrangement and Charlie shows off his technique too much. However, there are a couple of nice spots. We can't help but make the inevitable comparison with the Shaw waxing of this piece, recorded back in 1939. That is the way it should be played!

A Commodore record that takes our fancy is Eddie Heywood's little outfit doing T'Aint Me and Save Your Sorrow. A-side is a riff number that attained some popularity. It features "Doc" Cheatham playing some good trumpet, both open and muted, and some pretty fair Lem Davis alto. Davis gets together with Vic Dickenson for some alto versus tram by-play, very reminiscent of the old Beiderbecke-Trumbauer duels with Paul Whiteman. Sorrow is better, featuring Heywood's very tricky and unusual piano style. He plays some straight rhythm too, ably backed by Al Lucas on bass, and Jack Parker on hides. The band sticks together very well for some closely-knit Dixieland ensemble, and for a novel "big band" effect. Heywood brings the side to a very surprising ending, as with so many of his records.

A Dorsey Disc which is well worth a trial twirl is Chicago, and Never Too Late to Pray. The Windy City opus gets off to a very good start with TD's beautiful, mellow, and as always flawless tram. Charlie Shavers, Buddy DeFranco and Tommy again are next in line. The highlight on the side as far as we're concerned, is the nostalgic Goodman-esque clarinet noodling by DeFranco just before the Sentimentalists take over. Sy Oliver and the above-mentioned group come on with a knocked-out vocal which is clever but could well be omitted. We finish up hearing a tenor man with a fondness for one note, the usual screeching Dorsey brass section, and the full band. The backing can be flipped or skipped. It may appeal to the Stuart Foster fans, as he takes most of the side, along with the omnipresent Sentimentalists.

DISC DILEMMA

The Bluebird label seems to have just about had it as far as the Victor company is concerned. The recent list of Bluebird cut-outs includes just about all the good stuff they ever issued. On the way out are all the Hawk, Carter, Spanier, Goodman, Hodges, Miller, and Shaw sides on this label. Most of the fine waxings by Barnet, Erskine Hawkins, Hines, and Savitt have also been discontinued, as well as the reissues of Armstrong, Fletcher Henderson and Jelly Roll Morton. Many nice ork themes such as those of Bob Chester, Tony Pastor and Sunny Dunham are also on the way out.

The best known commercial successes of Miller and Shaw will still be available on Victor, but the others are well on their way to becoming rare collectors' items. Now's the time to try to get them—then tell us where some of the Spanier ones are to be found!

SPELLBOUND at the Loew's, 80% As my old pal Ben Hecht says, "Women make the best psychoanalysts, until they fall in love, when they make the best patients." But as far as the spellbound males in the audience care, the Bergman form is ideal for psychoanalyst, patient or just sizzle-phrenic decoration.

Paranoic Peck does a good job of parano-ing and Chuckles Chekhov as the old psychoanalyst is just like an old psychoanalyst should be. But Alfie Hitchcock has done much more goose-pimply work in the past, and it's about time he was turning out another Rebecca. The revolver scene is an example of the old Hitchcock touch.

However, Alfie does well by Salvador Dali in the weird sets for the dream that holds the key to the paranoic puzzle. Gem of the movie is the old boy's scathing comment on Bergman's psychoanalysis, "You know very well that the mind of a woman in love is operating on the lowest possible level."

LEAVE HER TO HEAVEN at the Shea's, 0%. One big goose-egg is fondly donated to this grade D lousy movie for a superb lack of anything at all enjoyable in a movie. Pretty technicolor scenery and organ music are definitely not worth the trip downtown to see Tierney left to heaven or hell.

Where Hollywood dreams up these morbid characters is a mystery, but when Gene Tierney and Cornel Wilde are going to learn to act is an even greater mystery. The way they ham this thing up is more tragic than the tragedy. In fact the worst tragedy is that lovely Gene is so gruesomely foul that you can hardly drool at all when she slinks onto the screen.

One of the more serious problems posed in the picture is whether Jeanne Crain is prettier than Gene Tierney or vice versa? It would be difficult to kick either of them out in the cold.

But as for the picture itself—you can get the same effect more enjoyably by going into a maniacal fit of your own.

PARDON MY PAST at the Victoria and Eglinton, 20%. This thing is a light farce which falls short of being really entertaining. The action is fast and interesting, but the vicious old goat who plays the part of the grandfather is the only really likable character.

As a comedian MacMurray definitely offers no threat to Danny Kaye, and Akim Tamiroff didn't leave his usual delightful impression as an educated gangster. In fact, the above-mentioned old goat provides the best humor of the picture dashing bow-leggedly about attempting to get somebody to beat the stuffing out of his grandson.

The only relief in this picture is the violently daring sex-scene at the end. How out-and-out sex like this got past the Hays office is a mystery, but if you like your sex of the low animal variety, this is it.

DIANNE SHAW at the Casino, 212%. Whee, Hubba Hubba!

By Don Mason

This week's sixty-four dollar question concerning a championship match between Varsity and McGill has been settled.

The Athletic Association emerged from their weekly huddle last night, to announce that there would be a sudden-death playoff match on Friday, March 15th, provided that the Senior Blues can knock off U. of M. this coming Friday. According to Warren Stevens, some "unbiased" gentleman will "flip a coin" to determine where the crucial contest will take place.

Rumour has it that "Steve" plans on locking himself in a special closet he has for such occasions, and flipping (unbiasedly, of course) a special coin he carries on his person for just such events. Two-headed they call it.

When the decision is made, by whomever is going to make it, it will be an important one. The two hockey machines are evenly balanced, and the difference in ice may mean the crucial difference in the outcome.

We have not been able to ascertain when, or whether, such a playoff for the Cup has ever been necessary. If such is the case, it has been on very rare occasions, as two equally great hockey squads such as we have in McGill and Varsity, are far and few between.

A BIG "IF" ?

Only fly in the ointment is this Friday's game between U. of Montreal and Varsity. It will be do or die for the Blue boys, as they must defeat the Montrealers to retain their first-place dead-lock with the Redmen.

Those who confidently point to the smashing victory that Varsity obtained early this season, might do well to remember that McGill defeated the same Habitants by a very, very slim 4-3 margin. Gulp!

McGillians circles claim that this one point win was due to the fact that the Redmen played their city rivals on a piece of ice that compares favourably to the page this column is written on. We sincerely hope that that is the true-blue reason—brother!!

HALDER OR GIGNAC ? ?

Blues' Captain Wally "Milk for me" Halder will be going all out come Friday night, to clinch top scoring honours in the intercollegiate race. Wally, with 15 goals and 8 assists to date, leads the scramble, but is only one small point ahead of U. of M's Gignac who has a total of 22 points, comprised of 9 goals and 13 assists. Interest in the forthcoming game will be heightened considerably, as puck fans watch Halder and Gignac fight out their personal duel. Our money is on Halder by a goodly margin.

HOCKEY HISTORY

With the Thompson Trophy hanging in the balance, it might prove of interest to briefly review the history of intercollegiate hockey. Having decided that it would prove mighty interesting, here goes:

Varsity first entered the intercollegiate hockey union with McGill and Queen's in 1902. The first intercollegiate hockey game was played at Queen's in 1903, when the Tricolour beat Varsity 7-1. That year the Queen's University Hockey Club donated a cup—"The Queen's Cup"—as an emblem of championship in this group.

Up until the first Great War, the three rivals split the spoils fairly evenly, but from 1920 until 1929, successive Varsity teams captured the cup. It was in 1928 that the U. of Montreal entered the intercollegiate group.

Then the Redmen reversed the tide, held the Cup from 1930 until 1939, with the exception of 1932 when Varsity again took top place. It was in 1936 that the Thompson Trophy was donated as emblematic of the championship in the Senior International Intercollegiate League. Teams in the league were Dartmouth, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, McGill, U. of Montreal, Queen's and Varsity.

After McGill's long reign, the Thompson Trophy returned to its niche in Hart House in the last pre-war season, 1939-40. Since 1903, Varsity has won 17 championships, McGill 12, Queen's 5 (none since 1914).

All along the way, the records point to the keenest rivalry between the Redmen and the Blues. The hoped-for game on the 15th will be one more battle in a long line of great hockey struggles.

Flip that coin right, son, flip that coin right!!!

Suggestions For All-Stars In All-University Hockey

Senior Skule Win Over PHE II 54-33

At 1:00 P.M. this afternoon Senior Skule pushed P.H.E. II out of the playoff picture, downing their opponents 54-33.

Roy Tredgett again turned in a stellar performance totaling 12 of his team's points. Wilson, also of S.P.S. chalked up 14 on the old score board. Forwards Bert-Gerrans and the Volpe brothers formed the backbone of the muscle men with a total of 30 points alone.

The Senior sliderule boys seem to provide the big threat in the major hoop loop, that is, on their record so far.

Lineup:
Sr. S.P.S.—Hamm (5), Hallowell (6), Hendricks (5), Tredgett (12), Brately (2), Robertson (2), Wilson (14), Farquhar (8).

P.H.E.—N. Volpe (11), P. Volpe (8), Bert-Gerrins (11), MacDonald (1), Dzeepena (2), Cheeseman, McMillan.

Now that hockey playoff time is with us again in the interfaculty loop, it seems time to pick the annual all-star teams. All managers of intramural teams are asked to hand in their selections to the Varsity sports ed or to leave it in the Varsity day office by March 8, when they will be tabulated. The final choices will appear in the closing issue of the Varsity on March 15. Sports writers, players and experienced observers are also asked to hand in teams, the only qualification for acceptance being that the lists must be signed. The only way a fair selection can be obtained is by having lists handed in from every faculty and college. In choosing, try not to limit your team to players in the same grouping but include other groups also.

Last year, members of the Varsity Blues were eligible for interfaculty competition, and as a consequence, the whole first all-star team was made up of the senior teams. Even the second all-star choices were completely taken from the Blues. However, this year players on the Varsity Senior and Intermediate (Jr. B.) squads were ineligible to participate in interfaculty hockey, and as a consequence many new faces will appear in the final lineup.

Of last year's first team, only Doug Davidson, U.C. goaltender, and Ken Andison, left-winger, are back in the Jennings Cup loop. Wade and Bain, both on the U.C. defence in 1944-5, are now playing with the Seniors. Bill Lawler, pivot-man of the all-star forward trio, is also a member of the Seniors. Bob Murray, the right-wing, is now a lieutenant in the Dental Corps.

POOR

Play characterized the first two periods of puck-carrying in a contest between PHE I and Vic. I at Varsity Arena on Monday afternoon, but the two teams finally buckled down in a third stanza of fast, rough, hockey. The attempt proved more profitable for PHE as they netted the only goal of the game, in this period, to defeat Vic. 1-0.

The next game is the game. Two have been played—each team has captured one victory—and the last game is the one that brings the championship to the winners.

TIME

For this all-important encounter will be announced soon in this column. So far all we know is that it will be played on Friday under the roof of Varsity Arena.

Twin Wins From Aggies Gained By Blue Cagers

Varsity Blues rocked the dying hopes of O.A.C. with a twin win over their basketball teams at Guelph Monday night. The Intermediates piled up a 51-28 count during the first game, while the senior "A" boys encountered a stiff fight before emerging on top 50-46.

The Intermediate game was loosely played, with the powerful Blues outclassing an inexperienced Aggie squad in every department. Varsity's shooting from around the key was especially poor, Meschino and Shimizu in particular missing several lay-ups. Herb Chelifetz was the best man on the floor for either team.

The Senior "A" game was another of those affairs which either team could have won by capitalizing on its foul shots. The Aggies led 23-22 at halftime, but their sterling record of only one free throw of twelve attempted in the second half cost them the game. Varsity counted eight of a game total of 21 tries—Guelph scored six of 18.

Johnny Burnett was outstanding, displaying that extra finesse on the floor which marks the real basketball player. He ran in 13 points in the first half, and, although closely checked after halftime, added another five for a game total of 18. Shields also played good ball for Aggies.

Andy Andrews' spectacular hook shot was the crowd-pleasing feature of the game. He threw them in from some of the most difficult angles, amassing 14 points to his credit. Himel turned in an aggressive effort, while Tettnar came through with two very important hoops in the game's dying minutes.

NOTICE

All hockey and major basketball managers please file their nominations for the All Star Interfaculty team at the Athletic office no later than Friday, March 8th, 1946.

Please be impartial!

Bus. Adm.-SPS II In Playoff Tie

In a thrilling playoff scramble, Business Administration held their vaunted rivals S.P.S. II to a 1-1 tie. The game was packed with suspense as the teams jockeyed for the winning marker.

McLean of the business tycoons netted the first goal at the 13:45 minute mark in the first stanza. A period later Young assisted by Sutton and Phelan potted the second and final marker of the scramble. From there on in it was a glorious fight to break the tie all during the third canto.

To settle the issue there will be a replay today at 1:00 p.m.

Vic-Meds Share In Track Honors

In the second to last of the track series, the two-mile and the 50 yd. 3' hurdles were run off.

In the two-mile run Preston of Vic. copped first spot with 10:03.2. Cowan of Knox, and Goering of Trinity came second and third with 10:06.8 and 10:27.7 respectively. Speers of Vic. brought up the rear in the fourth niche.

Rock of Meds. looked after first spot at the 6.8" mark, followed by the runners-up in hot pursuit—Word (Vic.), Hiskicki and Davies tying for the last position.

Next week finishes off this long program in the track field, which has all been handled by able Hec Phillips.

Pro-Chisholm

The Editor, The Varsity,
Dear Sir:

Don Goudy (contradicting(?) G. Brock Chisholm) must be satisfied to know that he, at least, will never be in danger of contributing to the evil of the world through his capacity for reasoning. In the first place, I think he makes a mistake in saying Gen. Chisholm abandons all civil laws. For the most part, civil laws are just rules of the game. For instance, you do not drive on the right hand side of the road because it is morally right to do so. Gen. Chisholm is concerned with moral rules, the right and wrong rules.

Briefly, he states that morality teaches right and wrong, that we vary that right and wrong to suit ourselves, and that we teach beliefs as facts. These statements, to my mind, are true.

However, Mr. Goudy, in his moral way, would have G. B. Chisholm removed from his position because his ideas are not acceptable to Mr. Goudy. I did not know Canada was "an acclaimed Christian country." I had believed Canada was a country where freedom of worship existed, the object and method of worship unspecified. The very threat of moral righteousness that G. B. Chisholm recognizes is exhibited by Mr. Goudy.

One of the worst examples of morals varied to suit oneself takes place in wars. Invariably, each country is morally right. The defender is right because he is the present owner; the attacker is right because either he owned the land once and had it taken from him, or his moral right to more space justifies his cause. At such times killing is removed from the immoral list provided a certain selection is made of those to be killed.

Presumably, the aim of morality is to produce some semblance of order in human relationships, and this it might achieve if everybody's concepts of right and wrong were the same. Unfortunately, this is not so. If not absolutely opposing one another, these concepts may be widely divergent. Religion and war are the most notable evidences of this.

In sexual relationships, also, there is a wide variation in concepts. To most, a marital union is right, and any other type is wrong. However, some consider that, under certain unsatisfactory conditions, divorce is in order; others insist on union to death regardless of circumstance; still others carry it through on the spiritual plane into the hereafter, and for them there can be only one marriage. Some insist on non-interference with Nature as regards reproduction; others think it wrong to give a necessarily restricted life to many, when lesser numbers can be given a life with far greater advantages.

Considering sex itself, we find the "clean-minded" (whatever that may be) person who is cheered by the fact that no "dirty" thought sullies his mind. This person, for whom life exists only above the clavicle, apparently does not consider that most thoughts now classed as "dirty" may become actualities after marriage, at which time, presumably, some cleansing effect of the vows will wash them up a little. The concept that disregard of the bisexuality of the human race is a measure of purity of mind, that sex, our method of reproduction, must be tolerated, though disgusting, is indeed a strange one. The above considerations are confined to life in Canada, and take no account of the weird (to us) morals of other countries and races.

I have not formally studied the science of ethics. For this reason Mr. Goudy's sentence, "To cease to be something and to become something else is an evil", leaves me breathless but unenlightened; and if I accept Mr. Goudy's three sources of knowledge, I cannot easily correct this. Not wishing to expose myself to evil through my capacity of reasoning, and not being able to observe ethics, I must await a revelation from God to help me.

Mr. Goudy speaks of "the wise and tender care of a mother to her child". This is a pleasant and chivalrous thought. However, biological fitness is the only requirement for parenthood; any other fitness need not be, and too often is not, present. The infallibility of a parent, because of being a parent, is not a logical assumption.

In conclusion, let me say that I support reasonable, as opposed to moral, conduct. In any situation, with any problem, there is a certain action, which, if taken, will produce best results. I believe untrammelled reasoning has a far better chance to discover this action, than the following of deep-seated blind moral conceptions, which has caused so many terrible blunders in the past.

LIFE INSURANCE — AND YOU

Two questions we hear a great deal these days are "What plan shall I buy—and how much should I invest in it?"

We think these are the main factors you should consider. First of all, your earning capacity is probably at its lowest now, and will reach its peak in about 20 years. Therefore, it is logical to keep your premiums low at first—providing you carry out your insurance buying according to an organized plan.

And that's where we come in—because we honestly try to specialize in the needs of professional men.

Sir Ernest MacMillan, Conductor

Tuesday, 16th. April, In Convocation Hall

Mendelssohn Choir Soloists and Orchestra

Art, Music and Drama

T.S.O. Concert

Having performed Tschaikovsky's Pathétique last night, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra has included works by all the major symphonists on this year's schedule. Looking at the season's work as a whole, and last night's performance in particular, one might well conclude that Sir Ernest MacMillan's talents are best suited to the compositions of the heavy orchestrators like Tschaikovsky and Strauss. In music like the Pathétique, Sir Ernest is not confronted with the perplexing problem of what Turner calls the duality of Mozart. The equally difficult problems in Tschaikovsky, Sir Ernest handles well and with remarkable ease. Or so he did last night.

The performance of the symphony was not ideal. The two middle movements, for instance, had somewhat less than their usual impact. In the third movement, the trumpet played false notes at the very climax, resulting in anticlimax. But the outstanding characteristic of the performance, and especially of the last movement, was its continuity. Tschaikovsky was presented last night in an integrated form and not as a series of unconnected climaxes.

The best that can be said of the performance of the Schumann Piano Concerto, in which Gertrude Huntly was featured as soloist, is that it was academic. Actually there was very little that was satisfactory in it. The first movement, marked allegro affetuoso, was mostly affetuoso, and the last movement, marked allegro vivace, was a hesitant allegro. Both the piano and orchestra were characterized by acute lifelessness. For the first time this year, Sir Ernest produced an accompaniment that did not drown out the soloist.

There has been an over-all improvement in the orchestra this year, even though their performances have not always been what they might and should be. The chief difficulties have been an inadequate brass section and too loud accompaniment. Effort has apparently been expended in trying to correct these faults. Next year's A.M. & D. editor may be able to tell you that they no longer hamper an otherwise good orchestra.

Hockey All-Stars

the Blues. Meds' Hughie Smythe and U.C.'s Doug Davison occupied the wing positions on Boas' line last year but these two young hockeyists are now the brighter lights of Staff Smythe's and Bill MacDonald's Jr. B. team which won the Intermediate Intercollegiate title of the province.

U.C. and Sr. S.P.S. Dominated
University College and Sr. S.P.S. dominated the listings last year as the Royal College succeeded in placing three men on the first squad and two on the second. The Engineers gained one position on the firsts and held down three on the alternates. Meds had one representative on each team, while the only other faculty to crash the U.C.-School monopoly was Dents' Bob Murray. Last year's selectors tended to confine themselves to the top group of Sr. S.P.S., U.C. I, and Meds I.

Wade and Bain were the only repeaters from the 1943-44 all-stars, Wade gaining a place on the first team while Bain, then playing for Jr. School, garnered a spot on the second. The makeup then was Bryans, Sr. Meds, goal; Wade, U.C., and Howson, Army Course, defence; Brownridge, Jr. S.P.S., center; Graham, U.C., and Lawson, Forestry, wings. The alternate listings were McDonough, Jr. S.P.S., goal; Callahan, Sr. Meds and Bain, Jr. S.P.S., defence; Cooper, Vic, center; Craswell, Sr. Meds, and Nesbitt, U.C., wings. None of these men played interfaculty this year except Lawson. Brownridge is rated in intramural circles, as one of the two best referees in circuit. Bain and McDonough are the only men who are still undergraduates.

Vic. and Trin. May Be There
First appearances will probably be registered by Vic and Trinity on the top-team, and it seems likely that Dents and Meds men will disappear from the elite. The Bus. Admin. group-winners may gain a place on the seconds as might Jr. School. U.C. will probably retain the cage position and one defence spot while Vic and School will fight it out for three of the four other openings with the loser in each case capturing a place on the seconds.

A Very Good Season
In general, the hockey season went smoothly. No games were defaulted, and every one of the 28 entrants played at least six games. Trinity "A" and "B" teams and S. P.S. V emerged as the only undefeated and untied squads, while Bus. Ad.'s record was besmirched only by a tie in their first game. Vic I was the only other team to win five contests.

The playoffs are now under way for the Jennings Cup, currently held by Sr. School and the finals will take place on March 11, 13 and 15 (if necessary) at the Arena at 4.30 p.m.

California Inspired SPORT SHIRTS

Here is ease and freedom; in the trimmest looking sport shirts we've seen in many a day. Equally smart with a tie, or open at the throat. They're wool or rayon fabric in rich pastel shades and some bright plaids.

Here are three reasons for their super-easeful comfort and instant popularity...

SET-TO-SHAPE COLLAR... Expertly cut and tailored to lie flat with or without a tie.

TAPED ARMHOLES... Help keep shoulders square. Extra roomy for more arm and shoulder freedom, without increased bulk.

FREE SWING BACK... A deep, full length pleat in the back lets you be as active as you like without straining seams or fabric.

a brief resume of their work can be given.

Much research has been done on the use of radar in peace-time flying. Mr. L. Gilchrist did important investigation on the use of Geophysics in detecting land-mines. The electron microscope was used a great deal in problems submitted to the Department by the Army Division on Chemical Warfare.

In addition to all the teachers many members of the staff were given leave of absence to join the services. Prof. C. Burns was with Prof. Wilhelm in Operational Research for the R.C.A.F. and Prof. H. Welsh was with the Navy for a year on operational research. Prof. A. H. Misner was with the National Research Council for three years working on the construction of big gun carriages. Stationed at Halifax for two years Prof. D. S. Ainslie directed anti-submarine activities. He worked on setting up electro-magnetic circuits to detect subs and ward off magnetic mines.

So the Physics Department played its part in the war effort. Following a policy of sane co-operation with the Dominion Government and other research centres they did what they could. Their work is their tribute; they need no other.

Rock 'Convoc' With Laffs In First All-Varsity Revue

By Wally Belfry

The first of two consecutive marches of mirth and melody, to feed the forces of I.S.S., last night's All-Varsity-Revue, filled Convocation Hall with crowds that roared, not snored.

It started when the piano player dashed in late with a trumpet under one arm, a sax under the other, thus freeing two idle Belshavians for active tooting. It ended when the U.C. combined choruses giggled their way through the "We Do The Show Sensation" finale.

The lid lifted from the Supr-ISS Package revealed two and a half hours' worth of a 125-student, all-campus co-operative effort as a late snack almost too rich to digest.

The supreme campus talent, including the fame-names, Harron, Siegel, Belshaw, etc., reviewed the year's cheers in an album balanced by Belshaw's boys, bound by that pun-gent. Ross McLean, Master of Ceremonies.

Chorines, whenever free, snuck into unpaid seats to watch the following features:

- Introduction of the sensational new ballroom-dancing team, Marquette and Lee. Lee won the best-two-out-of-three falls.

- Meds' skit, "Freshman Goes Frat", which the program termed "a short but pithy drama in which Lionel Leansmeat, the hero of Hangnail Hollow, takes Sigma Pi Alpha by storm." Only the frat, "sweet F.A.", can explain "by storm".

- Lean, laughable Don Harron illustrating Royce Frith's deliberate murder of lyrical "Laura". Later, Harron did a Kaye interpretation of his operation Append-Ox in such efficient double-talk that the audience was quoted as liking Luckies two to one.

- Meds' Girl Chorus sang, each to an individual audience, as they filtered through the aisles forming a great "Y". Their song's theme was "Y Not?"

- The most-demanded enchorial event was 73's Arthur Bell, who

Talk On Writing By Napier Moore

Mr. Napier Moore, one of the most outstanding of the Canadian journalists, will attend the Hart House library evening on Thursday, 14th of March, at 7.30. He will talk informally on "This Business of Writing".

Mr. Moore is now editorial director of the Maclean-Hunter Publishing Company. He was for twenty years editor of Maclean's Magazine and has been editorial director of Chatelaine since its inception.

He was at one time a reporter on the Vancouver News Advertiser, later the City Editor of the Montreal Mail, and spent ten years on the editorial staff of the Montreal Star.

Through his connection with Maclean's he has travelled extensively and in 1943 he visited England with various other members of the press. He has just recently completed a lecture tour, discussing "Canada" in Mexico City and several midwest cities.

All members of Hart House are invited to this informal library evening.

Announce Results of Vote In Yesterday's Election

Pre-War Antics Return

Campaigning for Hart House Elections returned to the colorful pre-war standards as Varga-girl posters covered the walls of the main corridor of Hart House during the past week.

The final day's drive to get the votes of the men undergraduates ended in a flurry of noise, color and turmoil. Not content with distributing their electoral propaganda, the office-seekers sought to attract even more attention with weird costumes which might have been picked up at a fire sale following the break-up of a circus.

A few of the campaigners, wearing clown suits and carrying sandwich-boards giving their various qualifications, tried to surpass competitors who came decked out as elephants and various other animals.

Hart House officials, however, state that the proportion of voters brought out by the increased activity equals only the same percentage as cast their ballots during the quiet war years. Although 1431 voters came during the day, it is announced that only about 50 ballots were destroyed because of improper marking, and defacement.

Following are the candidates elected to office:

House Committee: F. W. Banford, IV Dentistry; D. W. Bartlett, II Vic; R. H. Beggs, I Vic; J. J. Broderick, I St. Mike's; K. G. R. Gwynne-Timothy, I Trinity; G. L. Hargraft, II Wycliffe; J. A. Palmer, II Meds; L. Sklar, III S.P.S. Carried over; W. T. Sharp, III U.C.; J. C. G. Palmer, II U.C.

"Radio Has Opportunities" Says "Broadcaster" Editor

By Don Goudy

"The road to fame in the broadcasting business is long and arduous, and not nearly as glamorous as some people think. However, there is plenty of room at the top." These were the words of Richard G. Lewis, Editor and Publisher of the trade paper, "Canadian Broadcaster", in an interview about the prospects of being a university student by this particular game.

The fun of an interview of one reporter by another reaches its peak when the interviewee steps out of character and insists on interviewing the interviewer and this was the case when Lewis, whose paper is the voice of the radio industry, whether they like it or not, . . . and, says he, it is as often "not", not, turned around and cross-examined us about The Varsity, for he is keenly interested in the voice of student opinion.

"Why is it?" quoth he, "that so many young fellows seeking entry to this broadcasting business, imagine themselves standing augustly in front of a microphone drooling wonderful words about a maestro, or delivering momentous newscasts to an anxiously waiting Canada? Actually," he pointed out, "the most important duty a cub-announcer is called upon to perform, is to tell people with sincerity and conviction the merits of the goods and services which are advertising over his station."

Dick, he dislikes being mistreated, maintains that while there are two kinds of radio in Canada, CBC and private radio, the future lies with private stations which operate on a competitive business basis, rather than with the CBC, which, to quote his own blunt language, is "nothing more than a department of government, serving out to the public the kind of programs it thinks they want to hear, rather than what the people really want."

If Dick Lewis is right, and he admits he could be wrong, the best advice to a young man or woman starting out to conquer the cold, cruel world is to get into some form of competitive business, where advancement comes through merit, rather than working for a government department where your income grows by length of service, and where you have to wait for someone to "croak" before you can get a better job.

After a lot more talk about private enterprise, we finally succeeded in getting him back on to radio. "Breaking into broadcasting," said he, "is harder in a way than getting onto a paper, because you get a proof of what you have written before the paper is printed, but once something has been said into a microphone no power on earth will correct it."

Questioned about some of the mistakes that have occurred, he related a string of unprintable faux pas, after which the ensuing laughter on the part of your reporter was lusty and prolonged.

Dick Lewis may have been born and educated in England but he certainly believes in Canada. He claims that Canada is divided into five isolations—B.C., the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritimes. He says that Canadians will never know what their fellow-Canadians across the continent are doing or thinking until we have a national newspaper and a national radio system which operates without government interference. With this thought in mind he is laying plans for a new publication called the "Pulse", which will report important national thinking as expressed in speeches and editorials across Canada. "We are aiming at Canadians who think," he said, "like educators, clergy, editors, politicians." And then he added, believe it or not, ". . . students."

Listen in tonight on C.F.R.B. at 10.55 o'clock and hear a verbal picture of this man's fascinating life history.

Press Freedom Questioned As U.B.C. Scribe Summoned

For revealing in a news story that the University of British Columbia Student Discipline Committee proposed to attend dances on the campus to prevent the admission to students carrying liquor, Ronald Haggart, correspondent at that University for a Vancouver newspaper, has been summoned to appear before a student court.

The appearance of the story violated the wishes of the committee, and Haggart is charged with breach of the Alma Mater Society regulation that every student is responsible to the students' council for conduct which may be held directly or indirectly to affect the university.

Student officials, Haggart claims, are endeavoring to control reporting of student activities by correspondents at the university, and the court appearance will be a "test case."

President N. A. M. MacKenzie said he had not been informed of the proposed action of the committee.

Attention

Male students, preferably ex-servicemen, who would be free for temporary work with the Board of Education from Monday, April 22nd, to Friday, April 26th. (8 hour day, 65c an hour.) Special applications must be filled out now, Students' Administrative Council, Hart House.

TODAY AT 4 p.m.

The record program, held daily in the Women's Common Room in University College, from 4.00 to 5.30 p.m., is open to men and women of all faculties and Colleges.

Today's program:
Bach—Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring Handel—The Messiah, First section.

D. V. A. CHEQUES

In conversation with the D.V.A. authorities, the Bursar of the University, Mr. C. E. Higginbottom, has been informed that there are at the present time 375 uncollected cheques for ex-service students. It is desirable that these cheques be picked up prior to March 10th, when preparations are made for issuing cheques for the following month.

If cheques are not called for more promptly, the students may be required to get them at 55 York Street, and to produce certificates to the effect that they are in regular attendance at the University.

Heywood Meets Group Topic: Merchandising

Mr. P. K. Heywood will conduct the next Victoria College Vocational Guidance Group in "Merchandising" this afternoon.

A member of the class of 1917, Mr. Heywood's college career was interrupted by the First World War. Since then he has had extensive business experience, and is now General Manager of Evangelical Stores and President of Chain Store Association.

The guidance group series has been arranged to enable undergraduates to get some idea of the opportunities in various fields open to them after graduation.

NOTICE

Since Friday's issue will be the last regular number of The Varsity, for this session, notices of coming events for the next week should be turned in to the newsroom, Room 42-A University College by this afternoon. The last issue, Number 100, will be a souvenir number containing a resume of the year's activities under the general theme of "Year of Expansion."

Texas State University To Bar Negro Law Student

Austin, Texas—March 6.—(Exchange)—A court battle to force Texas to open the University of Texas to Negroes or provide an adequate university for Negroes is waging here as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People took up the cause of Heman Sweatt of Houston who wants to study law.

Sweatt, a high school graduate, applied for admission to the university and was "temporarily" rejected by the acting president, who passed the buck to Attorney-General Sellers with a request for a ruling.

Texas has never admitted a Negro to its university or permitted one to take a correspondence course. Last year the Supreme Court ruled that Missouri must provide an accredited university for Negroes or admit them to State universities. The Texas Legislature promptly changed the name of Prairie View State Normal and Industrial College for Colored Teachers to the Prairie View University.

But this meant nothing because no funds were provided to raise Prairie View to university standards. As in the past years, Prairie View's appropriation included a $25,000 fund to ship Negro graduate students to out-of-state schools if they insist on studying such subjects as law, medicine, engineering, pharmacy or journalism. Prairie View offers courses in plumbing, broom-making, laundering and other vocational subjects.

U.C. Lit Campaign Preludes Voting

Everyone in University College is invited to appear at the Junior Common Room on Monday, March 11, to elect their representatives to the Men's Literary and Athletic Association and the Women's Undergraduate Association. Voting will take place between 10.00 a.m. and 2.00 p.m.

Nominees for both executives will be placing posters in the U.C. Rotunda within the next day or two. Both Gordon McCaffrey, president of the Men's Lit., and Ruth Margeson, president of the W.U.A., agreed that next year will be an important one in the history of University College and they request that everyone in the college exercise their democratic franchise to elect an executive that will be able to cope with the situation.

During the elections dancing will be in progress, all presenting admit-to-lecture cards will be admitted.

Montreal, Mar. 4.—CUP—Election of all student executive positions on the McGill campus, except representative positions of faculties on the Student Council, is to take place Saturday.

Hail to the Chief

The tumult and shouting of The Varsity's private election campaign has subsided (not that the campaign is ever tumultuous) and in the silence that follows we feel very much like the proverbial little dog that slinks away into a corner and sobs its heart out. For us the year is over; and running at high gear to the very end, we have only been made to realize the imminence of the end by the appointment of the new editor.

Our regret at bidding The Varsity good-bye is somewhat softened by watching a man like Ross McLean take it over. McLean has been a central stalwart on the staff all year: if anyone ever earned the editorship, it is he. A seasoned professional journalist, alert to demands, bubbling with ideas, sound in judgment and a master of crisp, vivid English, he will lead the Undergraduate Newspaper unflinchingly through what is certain to prove a memorable year.

It's high time, too, to remind our readers what they owe to The Varsity staff: the staff who scamped their meals, skipped their lectures, and curtailed their sleep and their life-expectation to bring you a daily newspaper worthy of a great university in a great year.

Every member of the masthead has pulled his weight: this despite circumstances which made for anything but staff cohesion. The mere mechanical task of producing the paper has been infinitely more complicated and time-consuming than ever before. No staffer will ever forget last fall's incredible struggles with the University Press (whereof the full story will probably never be told); the scramble to fill that first big 8-page issue; the midnight gallops to the bus terminal with copy in the first weeks before the advent of our messenger-boy; the portaging of typewriters as a homeless paper took over office after office only to face eviction; the frantic attempts to keep the telegraph companies posted on our four-times-altered night telephone number. The smooth-running system now in operation is a credit to every worker on The Varsity.

It is a special glory to the staff that they stuck together despite stark disagreement on every imaginable issue. This has not, as we recently pointed out, been a season in which the focus of campus interest was the re-opening of Hart House Theatre or the etiquette of "O Canada" being played by the band as a slow march. Problems of capital and labor, of race prejudice and government action, problems in which men find themselves in perennial disagreement, have this year been the life-blood of the paper, and the staff of The Varsity have disagreed too. But there has been no attempt to enforce a false unanimity, and honest disagreement has not impeded the production of an honest paper. Considering the special nature of the year, we have been singularly free from internal quarrels.

Finally, the staff of The Varsity have been trapped between the demands an expanded campus makes on news coverage on the one hand, and on students' time on the other. Issue after issue has necessitated careful handling, feverish fact-finding; and there has been less leisure than ever before in which to do it. Compulsory C.O.T.C. no longer absorbs seven hours weekly of the time of every man; but the men of the campus are no freer for all that. Returned servicemen in particular, of whom we have had a large proportion on the staff, have found that the difficulty of re-adjusting to a life of books and study has necessitated ceaseless plugging and concentrated toil.

Yet the paper has come out, and we think it has come out well. It is not our doing. It is the doing of the mastheaders listed above, and of the unsung battalions of reporters behind them.

The Varsity staff have served the University well. The final issue, March 15th., will recount in compact, souvenir form, the news they have written, the events that have made university history. In the final issue, the emphasis will be on the year. Just for tonight, and in this space, we should like it to lie on the staff. McLean will have many of them with him next year; and we could not wish him better.

— W. H. K.

The lightning flashed and the thunder crashed. The wind howled like the Hound of the Baskervilles. The rain came down by the bucket, by the gallon, by the ton, by the old wooden shanty. It was quite a nasty night out.

Through the window of the old wooden shanty could be seen the feeble glow of a candle. The rain seeped through the rotted shingles and dripped monotonously upon the crude table where the candle was resting. (Tired of the Old Flame, you know.)

Yvinski Tatootler leaned toward the candle to warm his blue fingers. (He was from Kentucky.) There was an expression of grim desperation behind his new contact lenses; there was a lump of cold hate in his heart, and three slices of cold baloney in his stomach. Yvinski was not happy.

Yvinski had murdered a man. He had murdered the landlord in cold blood. ("Cold Blood and Butts" they used to call him; if you must know why—he was quite a smoker.) Yvinski had a good motive for murdering the landlord—a splendid motive, in fact. The landlord had just given him six months' notice. You have a house, so maybe you don't understand, but Yvinski had been reading the newspaper, and he had it all figured out. No houses were being built because that was part of Mr. Big's scheme to employ the unemployed; however, there were not enough unemployed to employ building homes for the employed, and those who were unemployed employed themselves by remaining unemployed. So-o-o, Yvinski grew desperate. (He also grew a beard.) Then, he up and done it.

He had a motive and he was not worried about an alibi because he had not any need of an alibi. He hid the body in the secret vaults under the Bingo Room in a big grey house on the hill, and he sat back and waited.

Before very long the Bingo players found the corpus derelect (it was three weeks later) and they all stopped playing Bingo and held a big, big conference. And all the scribes for miles around came to view the remains, and went back home to tell their friends. At last people began to say, "Why don't they bring IT out and let us see IT too?" This was very embarrassing for the Bingo players because the truth was that every time they touched the body neon letters appeared on its forehead reading, "Tilt!" and they regarded this phenomenon as too disconcerting for publication. Meanwhile the corpus became more and more derelect; in fact a whole new ventilation system had to be installed. And they say that even yet the body remains in the vaults and the air is still "conditioned".

As for Yvinski, he is still residing happily in the old wooden shanty. Lucky boy, that Yvinski! He has a house!

EXTRA ! Cat Sawn in Half Half you any Saws? Sawful Tragedy

Old saws, rusty and dull, have long been the mainstay of the English language. Historical though they may be, their sagacity is often to be questioned. The fast tempo of modern life has rendered most of them obsolete, though the common people persist in employing them as verification of their argument.

A scientific collection of several of these has been collected and tested by a clichéometer. The results have been released to the press, and are printed below.

A stitch in time saves nine. Take the case of one Sneekle. He had a stitch in his side, fell over, got a nasty gash and had to have 12 stitches put in.

A rolling stone gathers no moss. This statement was refuted by Prof. Tweep, Ph.D., who coated a boulder with Lepage's Glue, and found it gathered not only moss, but

Name McLean, Gentilcore Editors For Next Year

Appointed last night by the Students' Administrative Council were the editors of the two major campus publications, The Varsity, undergraduate daily, and Torontonensis, university yearbook.

Following preliminary discussion by the Publications Committee, the appointments are based on letters of application plus the recommendations of the outgoing editors. The Varsity staff in addition takes an unofficial vote as an index to the popularity of editorial candidates with the staff members they will be working with.

Editor of The Varsity for the year 1946-47 is 22-year-old Evan Ross ("Bud") McLean, Pass Arts student at University College, the Students' Administrative Council announced last night. McLean this year has combined the editorship of the year-book Torontonensis with the job of Feature Editor of The Varsity. He is also undergraduate editor of the University of Toronto Monthly.

McLean was elected over three other contestants by the staff of the Undergraduate Newspaper and his appointment was ratified by the Publications Committee Monday and by the entire Council yesterday.

"Now - it - can - be - told" accounts credit McLean with The Varsity's present 8-page tabloid format. When the change of printers was being negotiated, Bud held out for a tabloid against plans to produce an extra-large 4-page paper, appearing at a Board of Strategy meeting with a file of PM to demonstrate make-up possibilities. He won his case.

Innovations in the Feature Department this year under McLean leadership include the weekly Cinema-magazine, the "Angles" cartoons, the Swing and Jazz columns, and replacement of the dying Hither and Yon by the flip, New-Yorkerish New and Entrenous.

Bud was born in Guelph, Ont., but attended public school in Brantford, where he became a newspaperman before passing his entrance exams. In Senior Fourth he became publisher, reporter and pressman of a mimeographed tabloid called East End Expositor Junior. Collecting ads from local merchants, he put out 300 copies at 3c apiece and cleared $75.00.

At Brantford Collegiate he continued his journalistic career, editing for three years a class journal, The Informer. The publication featured a Winchellesque column, "Meandering With McLean."

In fourth year he was exchange editor and in final year editor-in-chief of the school yearbook, The Brantford Hello. The same year he contributed a column to the city journal, The Brantford Expositor, on the staff of which, in 1941, he took his first flier in professional journalism as a cub reporter.

Culminating a year's entanglement with the University year-book that began last fall when he was drafted as a reliable man to look after the biography section, R. Louis Gentilcore, 21-year-old U.C. Geography student, was appointed yesterday editor of Torontonensis for 1947.

Assistant Editor of the book since late last fall, Gentilcore has dealt with printers, engravers, photographers, and recalcitrant-representatives, and become thoroughly familiar with every production aspect of the 500-page tome.

A part-time journalist since high school days when he was school representative for his home-town Welland Tribune, Gentilcore in his final year edited a 16-page weekly school paper which he calls "easily foremost in the province."

It is significant of something or other, he thinks, that now that he's left, the paper isn't published any more.

Quizzed on campus offices, Lou slipped past his chairmanship of his residence social committee to dwell lovingly on his tribulations as chief of the Third Floor Soap Committee at 73 St. George St.

The committee exists, he explained, to set up a soap pool for the third floor bathrooms, obviating the need for every man owning his own cake and having it swiped.

As chairman of the committee he gets, he laments, "no co-operation at all." He admitted this might be valuable preparation for the heartaches of Torontonensis.

What of year-book policy? Would he follow the slick, irrelevant style of the last two years? "It's more fun to be revolutionary," said Lou with a cryptic smile. Might he even go back to the formal type of book? "Well," he pointed out, "that would be a revolution now."

Lou expects a herculean task. "The number of graduates," he guessed, "will probably be double what it is this year, or has been for some years." There will have to be a picture and write-up for every one.

A Newman Club member (where his principal activity, he claims, has been "selling year-books") and a laboratory demonstrator in his course, Lou half expects to wind up in graduate studies.

"Most Geography graduates end up in grad studies," he explained. "The idea is to postpone that 'what next?' problem a while longer."

Last summer he worked with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in Ottawa on sample surveys of census questions such as unemployment and housing. There, he half-guessed, the Geography graduate's future lies: in social usefulness.

Varsity Contributed Blood Serum Connaught Lab. Prepared Vials Canadian Red Cross Collected It

Expanded to Spadina

By John McRae

Blood serum processed in the University of Toronto Connaught Laboratories has been used in every theatre of the war from Alaska to the Mediterranean, and for every branch of the armed services. Blood collected from voluntary donors by the Canadian Red Cross Society and partly processed blood from laboratories across Canada was shipped to the Connaught Laboratories where the work was completed. The finished product was then sent to Great Britain and all the active branches of the Canadian Armed Services. Due to increased wartime facilities the Connaught Laboratories had at the conclusion of the war the capacity to produce over 5,000 400 c.c. bottles of dried serum per week. From March 1944 to March of the following year over 170,000 bottles of dried serum were sent to the Canadian and British Governments.

At the start of the war Prof. C. H. Best, Head of the Department of Physiological Hygiene initiated a program for the preparation of dried blood serum. In laying the fundamental plans for the project Dr. Best was assisted by many members of the staff including, Dr. D. Y. Solandt, Dr. Jessie Ridout, Dr. R. E. Haist, Dr. L. Chute, Dr. E. Fidler and Mr. Campbell Cowan. Later the work was taken over by Dr. Albert Fisher, and Dr. A. Charles. At first the work was done on a very small scale with donors recruited from the University students and staff and all the work being done in the School of Hygiene. However, the increased importance of the project and the need for more blood made a radical change in the program.

The Canadian Red Cross Society took over the job of collecting the blood. Starting with a temporary clinic in Toronto they gradually installed a clinic in almost every city in the country and had many mobile clinics to canvass the rural areas. At first all the blood they collected was sent to the Laboratories. Then as more and more blood was collected other laboratories were set up in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Halifax and other cities throughout the country for preliminary steps in the preparation of the serum. When partly processed the serum was forwarded to Toronto for completion.

Too Many Questions Asked "Wrong Number, Try Again"

Do you want information? Do you have to phone somebody or something at once and you don't know the number? Try the Directory, if that fails try phoning Mi 6611—a wealth of information awaits you. Try anything but the long suffering residences. There is a popular misconception about that the inmates of the residences know all there is to know about the University. People phone at all hours wanting to know all sorts of things. They seem put out when they are told, sometimes politely, and sometimes with more imagination, to try elsewhere.

The U.C. Men's Residence at 73 St. George Street has long put up with these ill-advised telephone enquiries. Practically every day and usually every night somebody phones with a plea for assistance. They ask for telephone numbers, they ask for tickets to various functions, they ask for election returns and they ask for anything they feel like asking for. Perhaps the most classic question was from the girl who had lost Pedro.

The telephone rang. "Hello?" said the person, who by force of public opinion had been bullied into answering it.

"Ees Pedro there?" a voice trilled.

"Pedro who?" panted the now interested artsmen.

"Just Pedro. He told me he was coming to the Univrslitee."

"Well, I... ah..." Somewhat nonplussed he stopped for inspiration. "Maybe if you could give me your name I could see if I could get in touch with..."

"Pedro comes from Argentina. I met him there. He told me he was coming to the Univrslitee..."

Well this went on for some time. Nobody got anywhere and as far as is known Pedro never turned up. Nearly every other call of this nature gets the same amount of satisfaction. The residences are not information bureaus. They haven't got every desirable telephone number at their finger tips and they don't know the time and place of every University function. In emergencies they are willing to help, but they get tired of the people who are too lazy to use their Directories or their brains.

VETS WANT SERMONS UP-TO-DATE

By Martha Schober

"I prefer a sermon that is up to date," stated what appeared to be an average veteran on the University campus, "a sermon in which the minister knows what he is talking about and is sincere because he knows that he is right and does not merely put over some ideas long dead."

These men who have been through the wars, whether overseas or not, are neither prejudiced nor alien to the church, but they cannot be bothered going to it. This is a broad statement that covers the majority of those interviewed, though there are exceptions mainly in the Navy.

"The padres in the Navy are young men just like us, who understand the needs of the men better than most of the ministers who live in their little ivory towers and never look out," said an ex-sailor. "Then too, the feeling of water all around you, I guess, makes you want to be nearer to God. There is nothing as expressive as a service at sea."

"No, the Air Force changed nothing in my attitude towards the church," was one of the statements. Others said: "I think the Army has helped me to grow up and now I see better the faults of the unreality of the church....Have them get down to earth....I don't go to church because I do not get anything out of it and I think that I could spend my time better with a good book and probably would get more out of it too....There should be less emotional jax in a sermon, no vagueness."

Most boys went to church regularly before they went into the different services. Only a few confessed that they had gone once a year or even never. Now that they are out of the services they go just as much. Those who go more have been influenced by the things they have seen through and the people they have met. These feel the need for something to hold on for support. On the other hand, some have gone through the same experiences and feel so embittered that they cannot hold their faith in the abstract any more. Most of the veterans who had stayed in Canada during the war are not changed and keep the old ways.

Sometimes there are outside circumstances, like living far from church or in a strange city where they do not know which church to go to, or a dislike of their own minister and a fear that others may be like him, that keeps him out of church. Not one of the ex-service-men had any grudge against the church itself as an institution.

"I only go to church when I am at home and have somebody to go with," replied an ex-airman. "I feel lonely and lost when there are strange people sitting around me."

"I didn't like having to be forced to go to church while I was in the service," voiced quite a few. "It is no good to be pushed into a thing you do not like and it just makes circumstances worse. Now I can't bring myself to go."

Usually a person of one denomination goes to a church of his own denomination, but there seem to be restless men who try all denominations and finding them all the same, abandon all churches. Though sometimes actual inspiration is found in a good sermon, which some veterans say are heard more often in the forces than in civilian life.

"You would be surprised to hear that the padres overseas, in England or on the continent are much more up to date, more clear and more subjectively real. That may be because they have seen more of the suffering and fighting than the civilians," said one returned man.

"We would much rather go to an English or Belgian or French church service. There we feel that we are actually coping with the same situations that the ministers are talking about and that sort of give us a basis on which to rely."

S.A.C. AT A GLANCE

...Constitutional amendments kept the Students' Administrative Council sitting through a marathon meeting from 5 to 8 p.m. last night. Reinforced by boxes of sandwiches, Council members approved, prior to final endorsement in two weeks, the following amendments:

- Alteration of executive titles whereby the President, a graduate student, will be called Chairman, and the Senior Undergraduate, now 1st. Vice-president, will be President of the Council and represent it at official functions. This move stresses the undergraduate nature of the Council.
- Setting up an executive committee of Chairman, President, Vice-president, and the two Secretaries-treasurers, to expedite Council business by ad hoc action on details.
- Appointment of a public relations officer to "properly interpret" the Council's doings to the world, and to play host to visitors to the University who are Council guests.
- Left in abeyance pending further discussion were the means of selecting the ex-service committee next year, and the admission of the Faculty of Music to Council membership.

The International Students Club and the International Students Service are active in promoting friendship and co-operation between the peoples of the world. To do this, the present general division of labour exists....

The ISC helps students of all races and cultures in the University to meet one another, learn about one another, and co-operate as friends.

The ISS assists students in foreign countries and maintains valuable international contacts.

In addition, both clubs promote their broad aims by

1. Contact—personal; correspondence.

2. Education—addresses; discussions; literature.

3. Co-operation in group projects. United, we seek your consideration of our common purpose, that there be established

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, to serve

3. A residence for foreign and Canadian students.

4. A building adding to the space and facilities of the whole University.

5. A place where the Carnegie Foundation Music Library and International Affairs Library will be available to increased numbers of students.

6. A focal point for cultural studies.

7. A reservoir of inspiration, information and assistance which will be given to similar organizations.

8. A centre from which students will go to many parts of the world carrying home a portion of the spirit which surely, someday, will build the new world of peace.

There is also a suggestion that this house may well be a joint enterprise with the proposed co-educational centre.

The atomic age is upon us.

Civilization cries out for united nations. We see our University as an important factor in helping this cause on our very campus, indeed, in sending its ambassadors to distant parts of the earth. Today our alumni are already in far places, and with each graduation, more of us go into the world. Tomorrow, let the University of Toronto send its people away, spiritually fortified so that they may take even greater gifts to the world we soon must inherit. Other universities have taken up this task. We ask you to stand with us to make an example of note, a contribution worthy of the University of Toronto.

As president of this University, you are the logical leader to whom we turn, to help us with your influence and your experience. We need

1) Your approval of International House.

2) Your suggestions regarding finance and other vital matters.

25 years ago in

The VARSITY

By Eleanor Dickson and Joyce Pratt

These were the good old days when—

There weren't as many headaches about Senior Matric, Chemistry or English Composition. Only Meds and Dents needed Senior Matric. Artsmen breezed in on their Junior. But the moral to the story is, that 20-30% failed in their first year. Now with Senior Matric to lean on, freshmen ride victoriously at exam time—or do they?

Intelligence tests were given by Doctor Standiford to 180 students, and although a man got the highest score and another the lowest, the weaker (?) sex got higher marks on the average.

They may not have rationed butter and sugar, but according to one student they did ration beautiful, intelligent and companionable co-eds, so freely sprinkled around the campus these days. Well, one University man was desperate enough to advertise for such a co-ed in the Want Ads. To the editor he wrote, and we quote:

"I have been constantly and sadly disappointed in the fair co-eds; fair as to exterior only, I fear. I have found the dear creatures willing to go to anything that comes along, but purely for how much they can get out of it. No idea of comradeship, you know. Most of them are calculating and selfish with no scruples about the truth. For instance, not long ago I was at Columbus with a Victoria College edition of Cleopatra. Suddenly her tiny hand tightened on my arm. In my frosh days my heart would have gone pit-a-pat, but now I leaned over to hear her murmur: 'Oh Dear, there's George, and I told him I was going to study tonight.'"

"Such incidents are not rare. They must sleep well, because they lie so lightly. However, the reason for my letter is that I want a girl for the Arts Ball. In looking over my list, I do not see any that seem to suit. I have tried them all once, and once is enough. Now the girls go for the sake of the party and not for the sake of the man. I get a girl in the same spirit in which I get my ticket. You have to have them to go to the party. I would give her up at the door just as readily as I do my ticket, but she is necessary to the running of the party. Gotta keep her just like you keep your coat-check in one pocket and hers in the other, along with her box of complexion."

"Now, Mr. Editor, would you run an ad for me in the articles Wanted column. The idea is this. I want a girl who is pretty, a smooth dresser and a good dancer, so the boys with whom I exchange will still be my friends. But, above all, she must guarantee to speak only when spoken to and then answer intelligently and briefly."

"Aw Gee! Mr. Ed., I'm afraid its no use. There ain't no such animal. Well, run the ad anyway. You never can tell, can you?"

Hopeful Harry.

But we mustn't believe all that a frustrated male said, so from another section of the campus, young women, in Queen's Hall, were saying:

"We do not judge a man by the amount he spends on taxis, or flowers. Lots of us would feel much happier going to a dance in a street car; but if you suggest such a thing, a man always pretends to be hurt, and makes you feel you've said the wrong thing."

"We know that most students are hard up and they know we know it; why do they always think it necessary to bluff that taxis are nothing to them?"

"Two men together, or two women together, can have a darned good time, without spending any money to speak of; --- ought to introduce the same free and natural friendship between men and women."

Take your pick, but we believe the latter more truthful.

Ajax Rumblings

The Ajax Camera Club met for the first time last night in Hart House library. A large turnout of about fifty promised well for the future of the club. Gord Broomhall took the chair and gave a report on what he had done for the club. A quantity of equipment had been lined up including trays, tanks, printer and an enlarger. This would be available shortly. Members will have to provide their own paper and developing agent.

A building near the laundry and centrally located is now being equipped with running water and sinks. There will be a large washing and drying room as well as several small dark rooms, available in about two weeks' time. Each member will have a locker for keeping his own equipment.

A pro-tem committee was nominated to install equipment. The committee consists of Jack Clark, Residence 733, Dalton Buckingham, Residence 733 and Gord Broomhall, Residence 737. Plans are being made for an exhibition of members' prints, and also arrangements for speakers from the city to address the meetings. The club promises to be a real live concern. Mr. Emond of Hart House is lending his help in every way possible.

The Recreation Hall is going to be equipped with professional 16 millimeter projection equipment. Workmen are now busy constructing a booth to house the projector. As yet the machines have not arrived but the management expects to have them soon.

Congratulations to Residence 727, the proud possessor of the Dean pennant. However some of the other residences claim that they are going to make sure that 727 (Can't someone think of a good name for the place?) doesn't get it next time.

On Saturday afternoon, Mr. J. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House was host to about fifteen Ajax students. After a very pleasant luncheon in the great hall, the warden showed them around Hart House and told them interesting stories in connection with the history of the place. Of special interest to the visitors was a pictorial map of the university grounds by Scott Carter. Mr. Bickersteth hopes to have more of the Ajax students out next Saturday and on later weekends in order that through these informal meetings the men at Ajax will come to realize more fully the benefits available to us at Hart House, Ajax, and Hart House Toronto. Anyone interested in visiting Toronto's great institution, see Mr. Emond, Hart House, Ajax.

Hold Anniversary Of Latin Enrollment

Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Feb. 26 —(Exchange)—The fiftieth anniversary of Latin-American enrolment on the campus is soon to be celebrated by Louisiana State University. Since registration of the first Latin-American student, a Mexican, in 1896, more than 2,600 students representing all of the 20 Latin-American republics have attended the University.

In 1940 increased enrolment of Latin-Americans made necessary the establishment of a special division which planned the $300,000 Pan-American house to house 19 North-Americans and the same number of Latin-American students.

Of this division, Cordell Hull said, while Secretary of State, "It has done much to improve and solidify relations between the United States and nations of South and Central America."

Editorial Encores

Poor Politics

Reprinted below is a topical editorial from the University of Manitoba's Manitoban:

There's nothing like a good spy scare for showing up a person's political sympathies. Just over a week ago, it was announced that there had been a leakage of information on the atomic bomb, that a well-organized spy ring and fifth column was operating in Canada. Arrests were being made hourly, while an unnamed cabinet minister identified the "foreign power" involved as Soviet Russia.

Up jumped Captain J. Osborne Dempster, alleged to have been the chief of Col. George Drew's famed "secret police", with a loud "I told you so!" Here was justification for his investigations into the activities of "subversive persons!" Ontario Tories agreed that it all went to show that you just couldn't trust these damned Reds.

Meanwhile, the loyal followers of the Liberal Party praised the government for its swift effective action in clamping down on the foreign agents. Canadians, they said, should wait patiently for further news, confident that everything would turn out all right in the end.

The most amazing performance of all was put on by Tim Buck, leader of the Labor-Progressive Party. Understandably embarrassed by the whole thing, he accused the capitalist press of inflammatory statements and lurid insinuations. (This is an old stand-by for any left-wing leader who finds himself in "hot water.") Mr. Buck said the arrests signaled a well-prepared campaign against the Soviet Union. He hastened, however, to assure the public that no member of his own party had as yet been jailed.

Yes, it was all very amusing. Each man judged this new crisis on the basis of his own political sympathies, without regard to its true implications. Few, if any leaders realized that this was a severe threat to world peace and not just another opportunity for pro-Russians and anti-Russians to fly at each other's throats.

Once again it has been demonstrated that many of the political bright lights of this country can do nothing more than protect their own particular interests whenever a crisis threatens. Others, like John Bracken, resort to long, wordy and completely meaningless statements designed merely to keep their authors out of trouble.

Once again it has been shown that the standards of Canadian politics are notoriously low. We must do better than this if Canada is to take her place as a world power.

Students At Mac Propose Memorial

Hamilton, March 1—(CUP)—Plans for McMaster's War Memorial will be complete on March 8 when a student committee meets with an Alumni group for organization of the project to build a three-piece Memorial Gymnasium — swimming pool, locker rooms, and gymnasium. This gymnasium is designed to be in keeping with the modern spirit of practical memorials.

About $250,000 will be necessary to finance the project. This will probably be raised jointly by the Alumni and the students, the latter's share to come to about $500 yearly.

Housing $24 a Month For Vets at Louisiana

Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Feb. 22—(Exchange)—Married veterans at Louisiana State University will pay approximately $24.00 a month rent for 40 just-completed housing units, each with an automatic hot water heater, an apartment-type range and an icebox. Utilities are included in the rent.

Each of the white houses is 16 feet square and is divided into three sections: a combination kitchen-living room, a bedroom and a bath.

Additional housing units numbering 195 have been assigned the University by the federal government but it is not yet known whether these will be huts, barracks or trailers.

Some of them shouldn't of been thought of, of, of, of. An old flame never dies.

National Advisory Council On School Broadcasting

Provincial representatives from nine departments of education across Canada are scheduled to meet with the CBC education department and groups interested in school broadcasting when the third annual meeting of the National Advisory Council on School Broadcasting meets March 14 to 16. Dr. R. C. Wallace, principal and vice-chancellor of Queen's University, and chairman of the council, will preside at the sessions.

Delegates will hear reports on CBC national and regional network school broadcasts and on Radio College, the CBC French network educational series. Courses include art, history, science, music, literature, languages and social studies.

Two series in the national school broadcasts aroused "favorable comment," according to the council's annual report. These were "Messages For Tomorrow," a new departure in school broadcasting in which prominent Canadians discussed their work and its significance in Canadian life. Among those who took part were Lester B. Pearson, Canadian Ambassador to the United States; Leonard W. Brockington, K.C.; Wilfred Pelletier, Matthew Halton and Foster Hewitt. The other notable series was entitled "Citizens-To-Be," four student forums in which the practical application of democratic principles in relation to the students' school, home, community and recreational life were discussed.

During its session, the council will hear a special address on the direction of an FM educational radio station by Dr. William B. Levenson, directing supervisor of radio for the board of education, Cleveland, Ohio, which operates station WBOE.

THE SPEAKER

Colonel Drew is a graduate of the University of Toronto and Osgoode Hall. His rise in the political field, to his present position of Premier of the largest province in Canada, has been both steady and spectacular. A strong exponent of Canadian Unity, he is an exceptionally well qualified man to have speak on the topic of Dominion-Provincial Relations.

THE TOPIC

At the present time the problem of Dominion-Provincial Relations is being widely discussed throughout Canada. Up to date there have been two Dominion-Provincial Conferences in Ottawa, with a third scheduled for the near future. As yet no solution to the problem has been found. Here is your chance to acquire a knowledge and understanding of the factors involved.

Speaking OF SPORT

FATE, WHAT GIVES?
By Bredin Stapells
It has been suggested that the Blues were a tired hockey team last week-end. And from all reports this seems to be a very plausible case for them. Looking back over the schedule, we find that they have played over 22 games, which is some going for such a short season, and it meant that every week-end since before Christmas they have been on the go. In addition, every night they have had an hour of practice. All in all, it could easily be said that they just had too much hockey.

The game against McGill last Friday definitely showed a tired puck squad. But Coach Bailey seems to have analysed the situation, for the lads, with the exception last evening, have not been on the ice since the Friday night scramble. They're really going to need all the pep that they can muster for this Friday's do-or-die struggle, all kidding aside!

The Montreal boys will be gunning for a win, out of sympathy for their brothers of the happy province if nothing else. Also, it is rumored that they have improved plenty since our opening crack at them way back at the beginning of the season when we drubbed them 16-5. Besides, what will be the use of all this talk of coin flipping behind secret doors, if those powerful Blues don't pull a Sunday punch.

And while on the subject of penny tossing, we only hope and pray that Steve is as cagey as our noted colleague made him out to be yesterday. Home ice could easily make or break the game.

Whether we win or lose the coveted Queen's Cup, we still say that the Blues are a match for the Redmen any time or any place.

While doing our usual daily tour of the campus yesterday, we espied a gay looking character hiding behind dark glasses. Could it be some Hollywood personality surveying our campus on the sly, we asked? Well, believe it or not, it turned out to be one Harvey Spence. You say who's this Harvey fellow anyway? And we reply in our best repertorial style he's the Blues' manager. Oh, you say, and where's he been? He's been in the hospital, we retort, didn't you know, and hurt very badly too—a stray puck in the eye.

So now you know why the team didn't do so well in Montreal—Harve wasn't there! Actually Harvey is in far from good shape, but he's on the loose once again, and can see reasonably well. At any rate well enough to read the Varsity! (plug). Good going Harvey for recovering so quickly, and look after those wards of yours next Friday. And fellas, the least you can do is to give Harve a win for his return present.

A CHAMPIONSHIP—THAT WE DIDN'T GET

Last Saturday at Western, a small contingent from this campus placed second in the Intercollegiate Boxing and Wrestling Championship. Western took the high honours with a total of 944 points, and Toronto came second with 556. The Aggies managed to scrape up one point for the success of their pugilist, one Hutchison by name. McMaster which were supposed to participate in the bouts were not to be seen even under the ring.

Do you want to know how it was that your Alma Mater was defeated? You do! Well, here's the story in a nutshell. Western received five, we repeat five, defaults in the boxing slated for the tourney. Toronto managed to put one purple man out of the ring—Goldby—by means of McIlraith's fist—the one Varsity fist in this fistcuff.

In the groaners section, we made all comers look silly, even when U.W.O. were given two defaults. 4.46-3.33 was the count for us on the mat tourney. It was certainly too bad we had to GIVE the championship to Western for lack of sufficient entries.

By the by, fencing also did not fare so well over the week-end, losing to the same boys 6-3.

FUTURE BRIGHT!

At hand we have a report of the Squash Committee on last week-end's expedition to McGill. The red squashers took the affair 6-4, led by the dynamic Pete Landry, and his cohort Dave Culver. Pete, as host, gave the lads a wonderful time. Apparently, he has promoted many tournaments down in the happy province, and next year he hopes that McGill will be asked to play in Hart House. And this would seem only right, after the exceptionally fine reception he bestowed on our boys this year.

Intercollegiate squash is an aspect of college sport which has been neglected here so far, and such an affair would do much to demonstrate its advantages. To wit, and we quote the report. "At the present time both the Canadian and Ontario Squash champions are members of Hart House; it is a Hart House team that holds the Ontario Team Championship. An excellent way of maintaining this high standard among the Grads would be to instigate intercollegiate squash competition for undergraduates, because it is only by tournament play that champions are produced—ask the Canadian champ."

ALL'S FAIR
By Polly Mutz
In war, love and journalism.... it seems. When the male members of the sports page tear up the guest sportswoman's copy to a third of its size to fill in the space with other material, they seem to be taking unfair advantage. Happily the end of the season prevents this type of journalism from turning into war. Let's hope we've seen the end of this stuff.

A RETURN GAME
McMaster paid a return visit to Toronto Tuesday night, in the form of their basketball team. Whereas they carried the score in Hamilton formerly, in the Hog-Town they were defeated by the Blues.
Played in the gym of O.C.E., the girls from Mac didn't seem to be able to cope with the smaller floor. (Their own floor is longer, broader, and higher than any the Varsity team can offer.) As before, the aim of the forwards when shooting for the basket was off some two degrees.
Betsy Quinsey, of Mac, played both guard and forward.... excelled in intercepting and passing.... has a most delightful Brooklyn accent. Lillian Laako, a girl in blue, proved to be a top-of-the-bottle guard. The Varsity forwards still need much coaching in the fair art of co-operation, and team play.... that is if they expect to shine brilliantly in Montreal this week-end.

The basketball teams all converge on McGill today.... wish our girls luck, and speed them on their way to make a good showing.

WOMEN ATHLETES AWARDED TROPHIES

U. C., P. & H. E. WIN THREE COLOURS;

Presented By Miss Parkes

At the annual dinner of the Athletic Executive of U.C.'s W.U.A. last night, awards were presented to U.C. and P. & H.E. girls for excellence on interfaculty teams and individual sports.

Miss A. E. M. Parkes presented the University Women's Athletic Directorate Awards.

Senior "T's" were awarded to the following girls: Sue Gray, Diana Lowe, Molly Bealy, for excellence in swimming; Joan Cannon and Mary Kier for badminton; Kay McMillan and Joan Christie for outstanding basketball.

Junior "T's" were awarded to the P. & H.E. second year championship basketball team; Jan Rutherford and Natalie Faber for tennis; Maureen Martin, swimming; Eileen Cameron, Mary MacMillan, and Marg Fellow for hockey.

Third Colours went to Mary Hamilton and Olive Harvey, basketball; Aileen Hanson, Liz Holmes, and Marg Dale, swimming; Lyn Fellowes, hockey; Ruth Margeson, Tennis.

Three cups were awarded. The Taylor Trophy for U.C. swimming was presented by Mrs. Taylor to Marg Dale, U.C.'s highest scorer in the interfaculty meet. The Kennedy Cup for highest scorer in swimming and diving in the meet

Blue Tracksters

In Toronto Meet

Varsity was well represented at the Toronto Police Amateur Athletic Association Meet, held at the West End Y.M.C.A.

Ted Toogood, of Blues football fame, ran a fast pace to beat Fordyce of School for second place in the 440-yd. dash. The mile run was won by Matt Dennis of P.H.E., while Phil Shackleton placed fourth in the same event.

Another Varsity man, Art Jackes, topped all comers in the high jump, to win with a leap of 5' 10". H. Drew placed third in the shot-put. S.P.S., C.T.S., and Vic. finished in that order to win the 440-yd. open relay.

Hec Phillips was very pleased with the showing of his athletes, who were competing against some of the best track and field men in the City of Toronto.

Bus. Ad. Win 3-1

Over SPS II Men

Bus. Admin. continued their winning streak by beating SPS. II in a hockey game which showed their superiority all the way. A 3-1 victory placed the Bus. boys definitely in the playoff running.

Groulx again turned in a stellar performance, of the type he has been producing all year. McLean put most of the effective offensive punch for the money tycoons.

Line-up:
Bus. Admin.—McLean, Bee, O'Brien, Henderson, Allan, Hasen, Verne, Wright, Arnold, Clark.

For Clifton Cup

Sr. School unquestionably evinced their right as finalists by whipping Pre-Meds A yesterday 53-29 in the first of the major league basketball semi-finals.

The play was definitely in the bag for SPS. as Roy Tredgett, one of the smoothest cagers at Varsity, led the attack which built up the commanding lead even by the three-quarter mark.

The game was quite rough, but

ATHLETIC DIRECTORATE ELECTIONS

The Electoral Meeting of the University of Toronto Athletic Association to elect representatives to the Directorate for 1946-47, will be held on Monday, March 25th, at 4 P.M. SHARP, in the Debates Room, Hart House (south side, upstairs).

Under the Constitution of the Athletic Association (Article IX, section 4) all Athletic Club Executives are entitled to send representatives to this meeting. These representatives must be male undergraduates of the University of Toronto or one of the affiliated colleges, who are proceeding to a degree, are in actual attendance upon lectures, and who have paid the annual fee required (Bylaw D). The Club Executives, now being formed, are being notified to meet at an early date, appoint their representatives and give them their credentials for the electoral meeting. On presentation of these credentials at the Athletic Office on the morning of March 25th, representatives will be given voting tickets.

A student to be elected to the Directorate must, at the time of his nomination, be in the second or higher year of his course at the University, but not in his final year. The nominations must be in writing on the form provided for the purpose, signed by two male undergraduate members of the Athletic Association in good standing, and filed with the Secretary of the Association not later than 5 p.m. Thursday, March 21st. The nomination forms may be obtained at the Athletic Office.

Books

Reading Without Eggshell

The first issue of Reading, a new Canadian literary magazine, is now on the newsstands. The magazine is a monthly, published at 67 Charles Street West, Toronto, and the subscription rate is two dollars a year. Editors are Allan Anderson, Ronald Hambleton, and Lister Sinclair.

Although the editors bemoan the lack of Eggshell paper (whatever that may be), Reading's format is neat and handsome, somewhat similar in size and appearance to that of the English magazine, Horizon. Literary material in this first issue is rather uncertain and uneven.

P. K. Page's long short story, George, is featured. It is an interesting enough piece, but scarcely as good as some of the other stories this young poetess has recently written. There is a rough driven feeling about the story which makes me wonder if it was written too quickly, perhaps as a special effort to help the magazine get started. But many of Miss Page's best effects are here: perceptiveness, a kind of sly underwriting, nicely handled dialogue; and the air of an amusing, eccentric friendly rooming house comes clearly through. Mrs. Loomis, a sketch by Len Peterson, is adequate, if little more.

Robert Greer's Letter from Berlin is somewhat disappointing. On the reportorial level his report is good enough, but it falls short of the interpretations usually found in similar letters in British and American magazines. G. B. Harrison's discussion of Shakespeare productions is direct and intelligent. I particularly enjoyed Morley Callaghan's brief comment (It's a Small Country) about the place and problems of intellectuals, critics and writers in Canada. This might be an excellent subject for a continuing discussion, which the present growing interest in Canadian literature, underlined by the appearance of just such magazines as Reading, makes peculiarly appropriate.

Of the poetry I liked best Earle Birney's Atlantic Door and Gulf of Georgia which have in them much of the restless motion of the sea and several appropriate and colourful images. Raymond Souster's Lower Yonge Street is cliché and disappointing. Is he writing too much? Other poems are by A. J. M. Smith, Ronald Hambleton (not one of his best, I think), Mavor Moore (poor), and Gerald Noxon.

Apparently planned as regular features are The Middle Section and discussions of radio, music, the movies. I sincerely hope that the quotes now used as fillers are merely a passing fancy. Surely there is nothing wrong with a few lines of plain white space? Possibly the editors might also consider having book reviews signed; for this makes the review a more personal expression and it further allows the reader to form some impression of the reviewer's biases, and therefore to discount certain of his statements.

It is good to see a "little" magazine combining good literature with an apparently intelligent realization of the importance of the technical and business aspects of magazine publishing. It seems to me that there is nothing more frustrating and depressing than a literary magazine completely devoted to those people who would automatically buy it anyway. There must be many people in this country waiting only to be convinced of the sincerity and intelligence of our young writers. Reading should be able to obtain the support of some of these readers, and without becoming either too slick or completely esoteric.

I.S.S. SCRIPT BRAIN IS SIMMONS

By Margaret Bowes

A first year Varsityite has recently made his debut as a writer in the very lucrative field of radio drama. He is Dick Simmons of U.C., and to-night the product of his creative labours, "Not Bread Alone", will be broadcast over the CBC network as a climax to the current I.S.S. drive on this campus.

When pressed for further data regarding his brain-child, Mr. Simmons informed us that writing radio shows was not comparable to the magician's act involving rabbits and hats. Writing the script for "Not Bread Alone" required eight hours of blood and sweat, if not tears. The initial process of collecting essential information was completed after sessions on the telephone with various I.S.S. members and after a conference with veteran radio-actor, Lloyd Bochner concerning technical details.

From there on Writer Simmons was on his own. In a locked room with a brand new package of cigarettes, a faithful typewriter and a stack of fresh copy-paper, he invoked the Muses. After a suitable incubation-period, ideas hatched themselves: a script was born.

Although this is his first attempt at drama, Dick has written before for the men behind the "mikes". As a matter of fact, he has had a pen in hand since knee-pant days; however, it was not until after graduation from Los Angeles High School in 1942 that he became associated with the radio department of the Canadian Press and began to do continuity work for them.

Came 1942, and Dick joined the R.C.A.F. as an electronic specialist. During three and a half years in Labrador his highly confidential work centred around radio and radar research. "We used the first frequency modulation in Canada," he reminisces proudly.

All extroverts, however, would do well to heed this man's warning and avoid Labrador, for it is a lonely and desolate country. While Dick and his seven companions were isolated on a neighbouring island with their equipment, their only visitors were a couple of eskimos and a pack of seals. He sighs in recounting it and adds wistfully, "We used to dream of beautiful girls all day long—but none of them ever materialized."

Now all that lies in the dim past, and Dick looks hopefully to a future in radio script-writing for himself, and a future for Radio in Canada. Prodded for an opinion on soap operas, Dick came forth with the qualifier, "gawdawful"; however, faced with the proposition "to eat or not to eat" he would, he supposed, shelve artistic sensitivity and temporarily consider such an assignment. "I guess I'm just a hack at heart!" confesses Dick.

In discussing radio's future in the dominion, he waxed eloquent. Someday radio may become a new art-form, taking its place beside music and painting. He optimistically adds, "As the public are educated to this viewpoint, there will be an expanding sense of artistic appreciation."

To-night's half-hour broadcast employs what Dick describes as the "panoramic technique" and has a fine musical background plus a linking commentary. It's his debut, and radio-dial! — unless you are tuning in a sense, ours too. Don't touch that in "Not Bread Alone!"

Lions 'N' Tigers 'N' ?

A most astonishing exhibition of amateur art opened this week in the Rhodes Room in Trinity College. Astonishing, because of the elasticity given the term "art". Under this head are grouped a number of paintings in oil, watercolors, and finger-painting, of fair amateur quality; a group of photographs; needlework and assorted handicrafts, including even walnut buttons; and a number of stuffed birds, no less. Well, it's interesting, anyway. The room chosen is obviously too small to hold even the first of what the Art Committee of Trinity hopes will be an annual series of bigger and better shows, and the exhibition as it stands suffers somewhat from overcrowding, especially in the paintings and photographs, which tend to kill each other's effect. Nevertheless, this is a brave start, and on this precedent we may hope to see a much better organization and presentation next year.

The appearance on the campus of yet another amateur college exhibition is an auspicious event, and Jack Stennett and his Committee deserve credit for a show which, although rather poor in general quality, has great promise.

ALAN GOWANS

This We Need More of

Last night's "All Varsity Revue" answers a long overdue need on this campus. It is perhaps somewhat trite to ask why a similar show has never been done before, but after seeing the wealth of talent on parade in Convocation Hall last night we would like to know why.

An original "All Varsity" show is definitely a must for next year.

From the moment when Whitey Belshaw and his boys began to riff the righteous the cast caught the mood of the audience and held on for dear life. In spite of the completely inadequate facilities of Convocation Hall (which a valiant stage crew tried valiantly to overcome) and a somewhat unpredictable public address system the show set a new record for campus entertainment.

When most of the acts had been seen and enjoyed before in their original context, it is extremely difficult to single out any one for special mention. There was, however, possibly a bit too much U.C. Follies at the expense of other shows. The Follies' acts were good but suffered to a certain extent from the fact that the original Follies had a certain amount of continuity and some of the numbers were a bit disappointing when removed from the continuity and staged without the original props.

The chorus numbers were a pleasure to behold—especially the smiles of delight on the faces of the girls when they settled down into their routines after a moment of hesitation and uncertainty.

Art Bell practically stole the show with his "Dear Old Trinity Blues". Prize skits were an original concerning global and marital relations featuring U.C.'s men of mirth, Siegel, Helperin and Bochner, and the now famous "Freshman Goes Frat" from Daffydil Nite.

First act howler honours go to Don Harron for his Danny Kaye take off. Whitey Belshaw and band surpassed many so-called professional bands that we have heard. Them we would like to hear at a Hart House concert some time.

Beat That Censor! CHAMPUS CAT

With the approach of final graduation there is a large group on the campus faced with a grave crisis—the girls who are leaving Pass Arts this year the easy way, with a B.A. To tie in with the recent Pass Arts controversy, The Varsity conducted a poll on the future of Pass Arts co-eds.

Stephanie Whirlpool, cute blonde with a leaning toward men, looked up from an Ancient History text and explained her future plans thusly: "I want to get married. Right away. No fooling around for me, I don't believe in this career gag you hear a lot of girls spouting. I don't have any inferiority complex or anything, I just feel that there isn't anything like a good, solid marriage."

Gertie Simpson took time off from a fast rubber in the J.C.R. to remark: "Men? They aren't so vital. When I graduate I'm going to write a book on how to live a full and interesting life without getting in the least bit married. Lord knows I've had enough experience in the past three years."

Hortense "Snortie" Smythe-Smith paused in the middle of a chocolate fudge sundae in Diana's to outline her post-graduate scheme: "I'm definitely a career girl. No squawling brood for me, I'm devoting my life to humanity. It's always been my ambition to be a strip-tease dancer and although I don't expect to start at the top..."

"Bubbles" Brownov drew up another chair to her table, ordered a half dozen more bottles and philosophized on her future: "For a short while I plan to be a great movie star. Then I'm going to be a great scientist and invent a special hotel for honeymooners only. And then flizzzblub wjeeeee oops pardon me for a minute I'll be right back..."

Patricia "Sexie" Armstrong, a Pass Arts senior who was chosen "The Girl We'd Most Like To Make Hart House Co-Educational With" by some Skulemen who were lost for three years in the basement of the Engineering building, said: "I'm heading for a wedding (copyrighted by E. Ross McLean) as soon as I find the right man. He has to be tall (over three feet), good-looking (only one nose), athletic (can stand up) and a great lover (no details)."

The general result of the poll seems to be that in the graduating co-ed class in Pass Arts this year, approximately 100 per cent. of the girls have discovered sex, and some even claim to have invented it.

Blood Serum

advanced quickly. At first the work of processing and drying was done in two rooms in the School of Hygiene. One vacuum pump and a drying cabinet was all they had. With financial aid from the Federal Government three more pumps were purchased and installed in the Dufferin Division of the Laboratories. More space was allotted to the project in the School itself and when this proved inadequate a temporary building for blood-processing was erected in the courtyard of the School of Hygiene. With the staff working night and day and increased space provided, they greatly increased their production. By the summer of 1943 in full production, approximately 5,000 bottles weekly were being produced.

But this was still not enough. More serum had to be transferred to the newly conditioned laboratories in the Spadina Division, formerly the old Knox College buildings. Here more serum was produced and more work undertaken. Special equipment consisting of hypodermic needles, rubber tubing etc. is needed to administer the serum. This was procured assembled and sterilized by the lab. Sterile, distilled water is also needed and a great deal of this was provided. Over 50,000 serum administration sets were shipped with the bottles in the twelve-month period beginning March 1944. The Laboratories also prepared 5,496 vials of blood-typing serum in the same period.

So another Department of the University demonstrated its willingness to co-operate with all agencies to further the war effort. Voluntarily donated by people from all parts of Canada the blood was collected by the Red Cross. Some of it shipped directly to the Connaught Labs some of it going first to other laboratories; eventually it all arrived here where the final work was done. Then shipped to the various battle fields where the great purpose of all work was accomplished.

Ontario's Premier To Address Tories

Colonel George Drew, Premier of Ontario, will address the meeting of the Progressive Conservative Club tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Women's Union. Colonel Drew has just returned from Florida where he held several conversations with Winston Churchill, who is coming to Toronto in the fall to receive an honorary degree at the University.

The topic of the address will be "Strengthening Dominion-Provincial Relations," a topic which was widely discussed in the local newspapers recently. The plan for a change in the relation between the Federal and Provincial powers was introduced early this year, and has received much comment since that time in the parliaments of the various provinces.

Sees Decentralization Totalitarianism's Foil

"The purpose of a decentralized government is to prevent the arbitrary assumption of power by any one man," was the message of Premier George A. Drew to the Progressive-Conservative Club last night.

"As soon as a country loses its decentralized government totalitarianism results."

Applying this to the field of taxation, Col. Drew said that the surrender of provincial tax rights would make the provinces "beggars at the federal government's door".

"In no single country where the states have given up taxation rights has the system remained one of federal government", said the Premier citing the Weimar Republic of Germany as an example.

He pointed out that Ontario refuses to give up any of its legislative powers because the federal government is not in a position to assume responsibility for such matters as education and highways.

"Up to 1917, it was accepted that the provincial governments would rely on direct taxation and the federal government on indirect," he said. Under the financial stress of the war the dominion government encroached on the fields of income and corporation taxes which had previously been the exclusive fields of the provinces. By the Dominion-Provincial agreement of 1942 the federal government agreed to ensure sufficient taxation opportunities for the provinces.

Commenting upon the present Dominion-Provincial conferences the Premier said that the discussions have reached a point which should prove fruitful in helping to solve both the problems of the dominion and the provinces.

STUDENTS TO PLAN CARIBBEAN FORUM

European Writers Topic of Meeting

Discussions of the work of two major European writers will be featured at a meeting of the University College Modern Letters Club to be held in Croft Chapter House at 8 p.m. next Wednesday.

Rainer Maria Rilke, "whose life forms one of the most remarkable examples in modern literature of the single-minded pursuit of a poetic ideal," will be the subject of a talk by Ulrich Loewenthal, IV, U.C. "I intend," the speaker stated, "primarily to stress Rilke's efforts to distill beauty from the confusion of modern life."

Eric Krueh, IV U.C., will discuss Thomas Mann, who "as few others do, symbolizes the transposition of values generated by the decline of bourgeois society. The conflict of art and middle-class respectability is his obsession to the same degree as it is a salient feature of a society drawing to a close."

There will be a discussion period. Staff and students of University College are cordially invited to attend.

Radiocasters Meet Monday Collaboration Is Welcome

CBC Broadcast To West Indies

Plans for the long-awaited Varsity production of "Caribbean Forum"—CBC short-wave program to the West Indies—will be crystallized Monday afternoon when Kenneth Brown of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's International service will meet West Indian students interested in production of the show.

In a letter to Telford Georges, III, U. C. Brown stated that student collaboration in the program would be welcomed—both as to material and topic. In addition, the production of one or two variety programs will be considered to consist of West Indian humor and music.

"The meeting can include as many West Indian students as possible," said Brown, "the more the merrier and from this meeting we will select three or four speakers for the Forum."

"Caribbean Forum" is a monthly series of programs in which matters of interest to the West Indies are discussed by West Indian students. The Varsity edition will be the third of the series—the first two programs on education and utilization of natural resources were produced from McGill.

All West-Indian students interested in the production of "Caribbean Forum" should attend the meeting in the Women's Union at 4:15 p.m. Monday. As Mr. Brown can be in Toronto for only four days it is imperative that all interested students should be present on time.

Scientific Forum Hears Four Profs.

Banding four professors of two faculties to discuss scientifically-topical questions, will be an open forum to be chaired by Dr. Paul Olynk, Secretary of the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Association of Scientific Workers.

The professors are: Prof. D. N. Cass-Beggs of Electrical Engineering, Prof. M. L. Northway of Psychology, Prof. C. Barnes of Physics, and Prof. A. L. Birdwhistell of Anthropology. Questions, such as "What is the Scientific Method?", "Should Science include the 'Social Sciences'?", the role of scientists in government and community life, the possibility of science being applied successfully for the prevention of wars, etc., will form the discussion. Speakers from the floor will have a chance to offer their own views on the topic.

The forum is to be presented by the Canadian Association of Scientific Workers, an organization that is primarily concerned with the application of science in the interest of society. Branches have been formed in Fredrickton, Montreal, Macdonald College, Ottawa, Toronto, Guelph, London, Winnipeg, Edmonton, and a university section of this campus was established last fall.

"This topic was chosen because of its great timeliness," said Werner Buchholz, publicity chairman of the Toronto branch. "Harmonizing the physical and social sciences presents one of the most urgent tasks of modern times, especially in view of the fact that physical science has far outstripped the sciences of society."

The forum is slated for Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College, on Tuesday, March 12.

SMITH COLLEGE EXCHANGE

All sophomore women interested in the Smith College Exchange should contact their Dean of Women immediately. The committee in charge is anxious to have, by the middle of March, the names of all students who, if accepted, would go to Smith College for the work of the Third Year.

Youth Education To Be New Course

For the forthcoming session of summer courses the University Extension Department announces the introduction of a course as yet untried in the realm of Varsity summer courses. Known as Youth Education it begins May 20, continues until June 21.

The servicemen's courses in both the Faculty of Arts and the School of Applied Science and Engineering are introduced (as last spring) on April 2 and will continue until late August. Those entering will graduate in 1948.

Courses in all departments of the Science faculty will be offered while the Arts faculty has a series of special first year honor courses. The Certificate course in Business which includes Accounting, Economics, Canadian Government, Commercial Law, Corporation Finance, Economic History, and statistics, will begin in the first week in May.

The opening time for the course in Social Service Work is as yet indefinite, but the popular Pass Course for Teachers commences June 21.

Monty Simmonds and Telford Georges.

The subject of Monday's debate is a secret, but of one thing you may be sure—the discussion will concern some humorous topic.

Election results for the Women's Undergraduate Association and the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society will be announced during the course of the evening.

Last but not least, there will be dancing after the battle of the wits. Supplying the music for all T dancers and others will be Hugh Graham and his Orchestra.

Choir's Easter Recital Conducted By MacMillan

The Toronto Mendelssohn Choir's annual performance of the St. Matthew Passion by J. S. Bach will be presented this year some day during Easter Week.

The presentation has become "sacred" to Convocation Hall and although the Choir could find a building which would serve a larger audience, they feel that it has become such a feature with the students of the University that they should continue here.

The Mendelssohn Choir was organized in 1894 by Dr. A. S. Vote who conducted it until 1917. During that time the choir was invited to appear in several large cities of the States besides making their regular recitals in Toronto.

Dr. H. A. Fricker conducted the choir from 1917-1942 at which time he resigned due to ill health, to be succeeded by Sir Ernest MacMillan who is the present conductor.

Under Sir Ernest the choir began its annual appearances at Convocation Hall and resumed their tours of large American cities.

Over the years the choir has presented programs of the best music both ancient and modern. In musical centres the Mendelssohn Choir is said to have brought more fame to Toronto than any other musical organization in the city.

The choir is made up at present of about 200 members, of whom approximately 60 are sopranos, 42 contraltos, 33 tenors, and 60 basses.

Membership is composed of persons who voluntarily give their services and who sing for the love of it. The choir exists not for the purpose of making money but to give the public the best in choral music.

Ajax Advisory Bureau Answers All Questions

Modelled on the Toronto example the Advisory Bureau for student veterans in Ajax Hart House offers all the same facilities.

(Toronto's bureau has dealt with more than 4,000 students and prospective students since September in matters of Course requirements and counselling, the interpretation of D.V.A. regulations, financial questions, dental appointments, study habits, and personal matters.)

Announcing himself as available for consultation at all times is the Bureau Chairman, H. L. Shepherd, Assistant to the Director of Ajax Studies. His office is located in the Faculty Office of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, Ajax, Building 313a, Room 9, telephone Local 55.

The Hart House office finds Miss Jean Martin, the secretary, on Mondays, Wednesday and Fridays from 1:30 p.m. to 5:15 p.m.

The group of Bureau associates at Ajax includes R. H. Perry, York Hall; D. L. Emond, Ajax Hart

Faculty Clash Re Debates In Last Debating Session

Final debate of the year for the Victoria College Debating Parliament will be held Monday night when four members of the faculty will cross swords in the annual faculty debate and argue the topic: "Resolved that university debates are a senseless waste of time."

The executive, in true Gilbert and Sullivan tradition, has added a subtitle: "Resolved that this is the debate to end all debates."

Speaking for the government will be Professors Coburn and Fisher of the Victoria English department. The opposition will be upheld by Professor McCurdy of the University College Philosophy department and Professor Gould of the Vic Classics department.

In addition, members of next year's executive will be introduced to the House. Minister of Finance John Trueman will give a financial report.

Maintaining that he owes it all to Benchley's "Treasurer's Report", Trueman has announced a slight surplus for the year. In view of this fact the executive has decided to serve free refreshments in Wymilwood at the conclusion of the debate which will be held Monday, at 8:00 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

House; the Reverend Carl Swan, Ajax Hart House and Residence 724. This group will be enlarged somewhat by the addition of both teaching staff and student members.

An added feature for convenience of inter-city commuters is the possibility of solving problems in Toronto by consulting the Ajax Bureau and vice versa.

Debates, Dancing At Red and White

Climaxing this year's undergraduate activities for University College men and women will be the final Red and White Night to be held on Monday at 8 p.m. at the Women's Union.

Main feature of the night will be a debate between the winners of the Portia Debating Trophy (women's) and the Robinette Trophy winners,

Back To Earth

On Monday you will have no Varsity to distract you; on Monday you should get a full day's work done. It is high time. Examinations are very nearly in sight. Examinations in the Faculty of Engineering begin on April 10, just over a month away. In the Faculty of Arts they begin on April 26: which is 49 days off.

There is much to be said about the examination system. The most pertinent thing to be said just now is that the System is upon us.

It is profitable at this time, at the beginning of Lent and of studies, to catechize one's soul.

"O Soul, Examinations are nigh. Art thou prepared, O Soul?"

Whereupon the normal healthy soul will reply with a timid, or as the case may be an indignant, "No."

We think it is sign of health to be unprepared just now; though it is not an infallible sign; it is rather a negative sign. If you are unprepared for your examinations just now, you may have been spending your time wisely or foolishly. If on the other hand you are prepared, it is almost certain that you have spent it narrowly.

If your course is in hand at this moment, why, you have missed much. You have probably been deluded by the falsehood that your principal activity for the year should be preparation for examinations: in practice, preparation for parrotting answers to a limited range of frequently arbitrary questions. You have probably thought that the purpose of the year's work is to enable you to pass.

If on the other hand at this moment your course is hopelessly foundered, you have been paying it too little attention altogether. It is not to be snubbed.

The ideal condition at the end of the first week in March is, we are persuaded, to be hopeful but not ready. If at this moment your course is in such shape as to be comfortably gotten in hand within the next six weeks, then you have spent your year wisely. You have studied, you may have also learned: which is a different thing. You have not kept your eye on the examination. Examinations are no test of learning: only of study. The wisest man in the world may miff them hopelessly, through defect of industry. The industrious man may triumph in the examination hall and be but half a man through want of wisdom.

The attractions, distractions, and opportunities of the University year give ample occasion for the gathering of wisdom, as well as the advancement of study. The just spending of university time is, like most other rules and principles, a matter of balance. It is an irony paralleling the larger ironies of life, that we learn this only when it is too late.

Anyhow, when the examinations come, we wish you good luck; not an idle wish, for the factors affecting examination success are threefold—native ability, knowledge of the material and luck. The first comes from God, the second from the Will, the third from Fate.

In the next few weeks you should get your material firmly in hand. If you do that, Fate will probably be kind to you, for her caprice is measured. Fate is a time-server. She is on the side of the winning battalion.

—W. H. K.

Postscript

This, pending our 16-page souvenir issue next week, is the end: but not the final, only the accidental end. We are interrupted in mid-career. For 100 days we have striven to produce, even if only once, the perfect Varsity. We have never succeeded.

Success in such cases lies in the attempt. There exists as an ideal somewhere in the world of ideals that perfect, justly-balanced, final Varsity. We have not made it with our hands, but it exists; and to our credit we have kept our eyes on it. Perhaps it will be distributed, free from verbosity, inanity, inaccuracy, and misprints, in the New Jerusalem, printed on sheets of gold. On the campus our only reward has been our vision: and for the sake of the glimpses of that vision that it affords, we commend to you our completed volume.

Enough of birds and rhyming words Enough of ales and cake, Enough of dames and parlor games (Enough of me—signed JAKE).

Books

Contemporary... Review

The starlings came to Canada in 1929. Perhaps they stirred Canada's insularity a little, just as two new Canadian "little reviews" are doing. They are Contemporary Verse and Northern Review.

The first, a B.C. publication, is a neat, gray little volume whose contents contain such well-known young Canadian poets as Earle Birney, Miriam Waddington and Louis Dudek. What strikes one first about Contemporary Verse is its bravery. After five years of publication on evidently slender means, its editor, Alan Orawley, though handicapped by blindness, still sees the gleam of confidence in Canadian poetry and literary endeavor that inspired him to begin his project. In a country that has always been suspicious of the artist, that is quite an achievement. The poets published are young and write poetry influenced on the whole by the same poets—Hopkins, T. S. Eliot, Auden, etc.—that have captured the young poets of England and America. They do not ask to be comprehended, and Canada is still so culturally immature as to ask that; they only wish to be enjoyed. Not a single person ever understood a sunset properly, but I am sure they enjoyed them all the same.

In the two volumes before this reviewer may be seen all the rare properties of a poet's world—the garret's sloping roof, a band of white horses from Turkestan, wet grass and perceptible "soft explosion of buds." Thank God this world is now published in Canada. Of particular interest and worth in recent issues of Contemporary Verse

By BILL HEMMERICK

For this, our final effort of the year, we have chosen to review Ellis McIntock and Stan Patton. It is to be regretted that we have not had the time to cover the various horns and the other bands. Especially would we have liked to have reviewed Art Hallman and his band (currently at Casa Loma). His grading would be B musically and commercially.

And now for Ellis.... There is really very little to say about the band, past or present, because most of you are familiar with it.

However—in June 1944, Ellis brought his new band into the Castle, after a very spectacular career. When Ellis was 14, he was touring the British Isles with the British Empire Boy's Band; when 18 he went to New York with Stokowski's Youth Orchestra; later he was playing in an air force orchestra, and more recently with the T.S.O. and Bert Niosi.

Ellis seems to us to be a commercial (he can't play jazz) trumpeter. He shines on worthless technical numbers, and leads the band adequately.

Ellis is lucky in that he has some of the finest sidemen in the city.... such men as Bill Isbister, Kenny Campbell, Mitch Melnic, Tommy Cronin, Gordie Evans, and our favourite vocalist Judy Richards.

The band is worth a B minus on both counts.

Personnel includes: Altos—Gord Evans, Harry Greene; Tenors—Mitch Melnic; Bary—Kenny Campbell; Trumpet—Bob Van Evard, Tom Cronin, Roy Anderson; Trombone—on Humble, Claire Kennedy; Piano—Bill Isbister; Bass—Murray Lauder; Guitar—Merv Johnson; Drums—Mickey Shannon; Arranger—Bill Isbister, Kenny Campbell; Vocals—Judy Richards; Booker—Bert Mitford Agency.

And now for Stan Patton. Stan, although he doesn't think so personally, has made a success of something rather novel in the city. His reed and rhythm orchestra has become quite popular in the last little while so we award him an A for effort, a C commercially and a C. plus for music, (this last because we play around with brass). Seriously, Stan is trying to create a hotel band, without the tic-toc usually associated with that branch of the racket.

Personnel—First Clarinet—Frank Gentle; First Alto—Jerry; Second Alto—Tommy Gibbs; Tenors—Jimm Riccio, Norm Bell; Bary—Harry Sherman; Piano—Rudie Toth; Bass—Howie Morris; Drums—Russ Farr; Guitar—Jack Dann; Vocals—Yvonne Lee; Tommy Gibbs; Arranger—Stan Patton, Rudie Toth; Booker—Mart Kenney.

Stan Patton plays Clarinet and Tenor.

The band specializes in vocals, using them for nearly every number. Hurray! Stan stresses that his orchestra is not in the same bracket with the big 'brassy' bands. He likes 'em quiet.

That does the bands.

NEW STARS—

A lot of you people have heard the boys playing around the campus—they are worth a plug here—Walter Gurde, Gra Topping, Dave Pepper, Harry Loughton, and Bob Wilson. Other new stars in the biz at present are Mitch Melnic, and (fill in your favourite).

DISPTABLE POINTS—

The difference between jazz and swing has been carried to the depths of poor journalism.

The difference lies only in the way the two terms are applied. It seems useless to quote publicity—seeking musicians, because in our estimation, they don't often concern themselves with the difference. When Herman plays, let's call it swing. Let's call all big band stuff that moves along swing. Let's call Dizz's, or King Cole's, or Condon's stuff jazz. Let's call all little band music (that moves, naturally) jazz. And that's that.

And it looks as though that's that.

Queen's Radio Men Observe Birthday

Kingston, Ont.—March 6.—(CUP).—Last week the Radio Workshop at Queen's University wound up its first year of existence. It was formed last October to provide experience for students interested in the various aspects of radio production. CFCO has come to occupy an important place in extracurricular activities since by the end of the year more than 50 students participated in the broadcasts, with many other campus organizations also taking part. At the final meeting of the year of the Drama Guild a new constitution was drawn up, where the Radio Workshop continues to be a division of the Drama Guild.

The responsibility for the programs rests with Dr. William Angus. The student executive, now planning to extend its activities, will include a chief engineer, a chief announcer, a dramatic producer, a director of features and a director of music.

Summer-Scholars

By Dorothy Harley and Bev. Echlin

Knowledge is in year-round demand, judging by the increased summer-school facilities offered by nearly all universities during the coming vacation. These summer sessions are intended chiefly for veterans working for credits in the rush-up courses. Regular summer schools such as Queen's Summer Radio Institute and McGill's French School will of course operate as usual.

At St. Francis Xavier University, special summer school will start about one week after the regular term ends. They will finish around the middle of September, one week before the fall term begins. Courses offered are in first year subjects and are being held specifically for ex-service men although other students may enroll.

The courses offered during the summer term at Mount Allison U. will consist probably of regular first and second year subjects. The term will begin on May 23 with the annual six weeks summer-school for teachers offering the usual educational courses opening in July.

Dalhousie University has a January-July session which was organized at the beginning of this term to improvise for 120 late veteran registrants. This course will cover a normal years work in first and second year subjects.

McGill will offer summer courses for veterans in first and second year Arts, Science, Commerce, Engineering and Medicine. Non-veterans can take French summer school only.

At the University of New Brunswick in addition to regular summer sessions in Arts and Science the freshman class of veterans which entered in January at the temporary Alexander College campus, will move to the university proper to take courses requiring laboratory facilities vacated by regular classes in May. These special students will then be able to enter second year in September.

No additional courses are being given for veterans at Acadia University but it is expected that many will enroll in courses on the usual summer school schedule.

At Queen's University the unique Summer Radio Institute, the first in Canada, offers a course in the arts of speech writing and production for radio broadcasting. Under the direction of Dr. William Angus the Director of Drama at Queen's, the course proved extremely successful from it's opening in the summer of 1945. When the course commences this year on July 3rd, students who took the course last year will enter the senior class.

Three times a week this group will produce a program over CBC. There will be approximately 60 students in the institute.

Which all goes to show that studying isn't seasonal.

Pen Pals

(The following letter, addressed to the editor of the Toronto Star, has been passed on to The Varsity in the hope that some U. of T. readers may be interested.)

The Editor, Toronto Star.
Dear Sir:

We are two Swedish students who would like very much to get in touch with Canadian students, but as we do not know how to get addresses we thought we had better write to you, hoping that you would be kind and help us.

I. Mr. Bengt Sjogren, Klostergatan 8, Lund, Sweden. I am studying natural history at the Lund University, and I should be very glad to get in touch with students and lady students interested in discussing nature, music, literature, and theatre. I am, too, a keen stamp-collector.

II. Mr. Sigurd Holmberg, Lervagen 24, Lund, Sweden. I am an undergraduate at the University of Lund, where I am studying modern languages: English, Russian, and French. However, I am, too, much interested in ethnography, all kinds of sports and games, and collecting stamps.

Thanking you in advance and awaiting the pleasure of hearing from fellow-students in Canada, we remain, yours sincerely, will be conducted this week by Professor H. Alexander of Queen's University.

—SIGURD HOLMBERG.

According to Dr. G. B. Harrison, head of Queen's English Department the purpose of the exchange is to enable the teaching staff to observe conditions in other universities and will show students other methods of teaching.

A similar exchange was arranged last year between Dr. E. J. Pratt of Victoria College and Dr. Harrison.

CRUCIAL TEST FOR SR. BLUES

Improved Carabins in Way Of Varsity Playoff Hopes

By Brian Land

When Coco Blanchard's University of Montreal Carabins step out on the ice at Varsity Arena tonight, they will have the local Blues very definitely on the spot. Varsity is faced with the prospect of defeating Les Carabins, or of conceding the Queen's Cup to the McGill Redmen.

Turning back the Montrealers will be no easy task, but it is a distinct possibility which the Blues mean to turn into a reality. The French boys have improved rapidly each time out, as McGill who had to fight for a 4-3 victory in their last meeting, will readily testify.

So far this season, the Frenchmen have had three goalies—Mercier, Royal and the latest addition Cote. (As yet the much-travelled Paul Bibeault has not appeared in the nets, but who knows?)

On defence Tailon and Dion alternate with Lussier and Vaillancourt. On the forward line are found the Pepin brothers and Picard. Of the latter Le Quartier Latin, the U. of M. says simply "quel poke-check". The other forward line is composed of Laperriere, Dolbec and Gignac. By the way keep your eye on this boy Gignac.

Gignac Sets Record

While playing against Queen's,

Jean-Paul Gignac set a new Intercollegiate record by scoring five goals and assisting in six others. In addition, Gignac is tailing Wally Halder of the Blues for individual scoring honours. But it is to be remembered that half of Gignac's points (22), came against the lowly Queensmen, and his opposition is bound to be tougher tonight. However, let's hope that J-P is content to rest on his laurels.

The game tonight means nothing to the Montrealers in the way of standing, as they will finish third in the Intercollegiate loop regardless of their performance; Such is not the case with Varsity. Before any playoff is arranged, Varsity must win in order to gain a tie with McGill for first place.

In their first game against Varsity U. of M. lost 16-5 as Wally Halder counted four goals and 3 assists. R. Pepin was Montreal's chief threat with three goals, all coming in the third period. It might be pointed out that Montreal is a strong third period club. In the first game with the Blues they netted all five of their goals in the last stanza, and against Queen's, the Carabins put the biscuit in the basket nine times without a reply!

Doyle Not Playing

Word from the Varsity camp has it that Bill Doyle will be absent from the line-up due to a throat infection. Doyle will be replaced on defence by Harvey Bain. Ace Bailey will also dress sub-goalie Murphy in lieu of an extra forward. The Blues went through a light workout yesterday on very slow ice. The ice may be a determining factor, as it is bound to slow up both squads, unless the weather turns much colder. Large puddles of water covered the ice-surface in spots and the ice itself was extremely soft.

The Blues have been storing excess strength all this week, having had only two practice sessions since the epic at the Forum last Friday.

Montreal Forum Out

Once they have won tonight's game (we hope!), the stage will be set for the "tossing of the coin", an act to be perpetrated by the President of Queen's. If McGill should win the proposed toss, they might have to choose neutral ice, as the Montreal Forum is engaged for the night of March 15th. Probably the Kingston Arena would be chosen as the "neutral" ice. Home ice means plenty in the playoff picture and it seems that McGill will not have this advantage.

To sum up tonight's doings, we again take the liberty of quoting Le Quartier Latin, the U. of M. paper: "S'ils pouvaient triompher des gars de Ace Bailey dans la Ville Reine, il nous resterait qu'à faire bruler des douzaine de lampions"....Brother you said it!

HOCKEY FINALE

The faculty of Vic. can boast of a grade A bridge club... one of the finest on the campus... besides which claim to fame, their women's hockey club has walked off the ice with the hockey cup under its arm. That trophy must be slowly becoming part of the particular corner of Wymilwood which it has occupied for the past four years.

The game, third of the final series between P.H.E. and Vic., was won due to the efforts of the star player of the season... Leona Eunson. She scored the one and only goal of the entire game. The Phys. Eds incurred the sole penalty when one of the gals threw a hockey stick at an opponent. (She missed).

SPORTSWOMAN FINALE

Just before the season closes, thanks are due to the many clubs on the campus (of the sports variety) who aided our search for news. Sue Gray, Leona Eunson, Janet Hughes, Judy Rowe, Dorothy Sanders, Barbara Hinchcliffe, Margaret Fletcher, and Ruth Pakenham... please take a curtain call.

Varsity 2nd. Team Reap Relay Record Take Collegiate Swimming Championship

Ajax Anderson Stars

By Craig Cringan

With a total of 48 points the Varsity 2nd team placed first in the Intermediate Intercollegiate Swimming Championships held at the Hamilton Municipal Pool on Thursday afternoon. Western, with 17 points, placed second, while O.A.C. tallied 11 points and McMaster 1.

Churning the water in record time, the Blues relay team of Anderson, Granfield, McEwen, and Sabiston easily won the 200 yd. free style sprint. Their time of 1:46.3 cuts 3 of a second off the Intermediate record.

The three other teams beat the Blues in only two of the eight events, the diving and the 200 yard breast stroke. The remaining six events were won by Varsity swimmers.

Ross Anderson of Ajax, a man known to the rest of the team only by report, was the leading star of the meet, figuring in the winning of 18 points. Besides coming first in both the 50 and 100 yard free style event, Ross did his bit for the record-breaking relay team.

Schoolman Jim Martin led the field in the 300 yard free style by such a substantial margin that he was able to take it easy in the last few lengths. Upon hearing afterwards that his time of 4:33 was just nine seconds over the Intermediate record, Jim solemnly remarked, "I wish I had known." Jim, who starred for Varsity in last year's telegraphic swim meet, could easily have made the senior team this year had he not concentrated all his energy in captaining the senior water polo team.

Another water polo player, Ed Lindgren, trains regularly at swimming and was kept off the senior team only by the stiff competition put up by MacDonald and Beverly, both of whom won points in the senior meet held at Kingston last Saturday. Swimming against the best from the West, Lindgren came first in the 100 yd. back stroke as well as establishing a substantial lead in the 300 yd. medley relay.

Build Up Teams

The principal feature of Varsity's swimming teams this year has been the large number of good dependable swimmers. Five years ago Varsity had 8 top rate swimmers. Today there are at least 25 men capable of winning points in intercollegiate competition. The result has been two teams, one which beat McGill and Queens, the other trouncing the intermediate colleges, Western, O.A.C. and McMaster.

The Events

300 Medley Relay: — Toronto (Lindgren, Hall, McEwen) 3:42.2. O.A.C., Western.

SPS I Push Trin A Out of Cup Finals

SPS I enter the intramural hockey playoffs Monday as a result of the 9-1 drubbing they handed Trinity A yesterday. The margin in the play was not as great as the score would indicate but Trinity lacked the polish to finish out a play once they had crossed their opponents' blue line.

Throughout the game a fast pace was maintained despite the poor condition of the ice; the latter fact was probably the reason for such ragged passing at some stages of the game.

Heid scoreless until midway through the first stanza the schoolmen turned on the heat after Sabiston's first goal, and ran in two more within a minute and 5 more before the end of the period. After this the teams settled down, and only 3 more goals were scored in the third period.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Don Mason

To the throbbing beat, the sensuous rhythm of the "Shrdlu Blues", the last regular sports column flows from the scribe's pen. His head is bent, his shoulders hunched, his eyes are dim, he cannot see, he has not brought.... He's tired!

No more will he wake in the night with the scream of "Copy Boy!" ringing in his sleep be-numbed ears; no more will he run, screaming from the lecture room at the sound of the word "sport"; no more the clacking of typewriters, the tearing screams of un-by-lined reporters, the noise, the shouting, the maddening, driving, insane rush. All is calm. All is bright, round yon Virgin... It's quiet, here!

In a coffin made of old sports stories, with a basketball team acting as pall bearers, our comradely comrade, our friendly friend, Breeding Stables, killed by worry and fatigue, is laid to rest in a grave dug by the Athletic Directorate. The choir, attired in black hockey togs, fittingly chant the mournful dirge "Hold that Line". The air is rent with sobs. Fog settles over the huddled figures. The scene grows dim. The hooded lanterns remind one of the stars at night. Are big and bright, deep in the heart.... It's cold out here!

And so, with a sob, the scribe covers his typewriter, folds the bags under his eyes, and sadly, sorrowfully locks the door marked "Sports Department". With slow tread he wanders off into the vast night. No sound. No backward glance. All is calm. All is bright, round yon Virgin....

Science and Soul

The Editor, The Varsity,
Dear Sir:
Mr. Newell is confused. He, as do many others, finds great difficulty in reconciling science with the soul. Scientific knowledge has at last prevailed upon him to yield up the delightful view of a vital force, yet he clings stubbornly to obscure entities which are infinitely more controversial.
If there is no vital force wherein lies the means and existence of a non-physical soul?

I suggest that a science editor be appointed to The Varsity staff to spare the long-suffering public from such balderdash as Mr. Newell's latest letter.
K. G. WOOD, III Biol.

are four poems by Bertram Warr, an exile from Canada who attracted some attention in English literary circles before his unfortunate death on air operations.

Northern Review is a more pretentious publication. The child of Preview and First Statement, it is quite obviously attempting a more polished "little" magazine than has hitherto appeared in Canada and there is a smart, assured air about its very cover that makes one wish it success. Of the "New Writing in Canada" it professes to publish, it has elected to present He Who Alien Traces Road by William McConnel. Mr. McConnel is delightfully emetic over a squashed housefly. Mr. Souster in After Dark gives us quite a douche of the leg-flesh-thigh soft school of love poetry. In his New York Letter, Ralph Gustafson assures us of the "northernness" of Canadian poetry and the heartening news that Canada contributes more to poetical literature, in proportion to its size, than any other English-speaking unit in the world.

There are also well-spaced poems by A. J. M. Smith, Dorothy Livesay, the renowned Klein, and others. Mr. Smith has contributed an article on Nationalism and Canadian Poetry, in which he expresses what is certainly one of Northern Review's purposes — to hasten the time "when it (will be) recognized that a cosmopolitan culture is more valuable than an isolated one." Northern Review should further this, and there is a sign, in the very last number in the issue, that it means to carry it out — a review of Anne Marriott's Sandstone and Other Poems. Most Canadian critics would have praised her outright, with no blame whatsoever. Northern Review's critic has refused to pamper the poet, simply because she is a Canadian; on the contrary, he implies that all Canadian literature must stand on its own feet to be criticized on universal standards and judged in the light of other cosmopolitan literature. If Canadian literature has come of age, it is not because one of her novelists received heaps of prize-money; it is because two of her little reviews, Contemporary Verse and Northern Review are investing in less shiny but more artistic wares.
—JAMES REANEY.

McGill Drive Goes On Despite Controversy

Montreal, Que.—March 6.—(CUP)—McGill University continues with its War Memorial Campaign to build a rink-auditorium despite much controversy. The majority of the graduates and undergraduates are supporting this building because of its manifold uses as a concert hall, a convocation hall and a suitable scene for festivals and rallies. All these are urgently needed.
The supplying of funds by students and graduates for the construction of the rink-auditorium, releases some of the University funds for other projects.

Opera A la Carte

Last night's concert at Eaton Auditorium by four members of the Metropolitan Opera was not a great success because so few people nowadays are psychic. Defying concert tradition, scenes from various operas were dramatized by means of costumes, props and acting (that last word is used very loosely). But with the exception of Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor", everything was sung in either French or Italian, even a scene from the originally-Russian "Boris Goudonoff". Brief program notes were useless for such lengthy scenes. The result was as intelligible as a movie when the sound machine breaks down.

Without words, the emotional over-acting seemed uncalled for, and hence silly. The audience applauded politely but appeared bored. After all, if you're going to spend an evening watching people pound their heads against tables you should know why they're doing it.

The singing was good, with Act III from "La Boheme" being most enjoyable despite the stomach-clutching. The singers were Jarmila Novotna, soprano, Herta Glaz, allegedly contralto but actually a light mezzo, Raoul Jobin, tenor, and Martial Singher, baritone.

vastly increased since October over former levels, while indications of even further growth are evident.

It is now felt that only an independent Fencing Club can capably organize this new large body, promote in it an "Esprit de Corps", and adequately present its claims for the consideration of the athletic authorities. Additional facilities for graduate and summer activity may also be provided.

The proposed fencing club is expected to facilitate Intercollegiate competition by improved and closer organization and the adequate definition of the Senior and Intermediate levels. With more interest and better organization the quality of Varsity teams entered in these events will be much improved.

After discussion of the separation motion, a pro-tem fencing committee was elected consisting of Charles Walters, Esq., and O. A. Reynolds, honorary president and vice-president; Keith Conn, president; John Mills, vice-president; Dick Thompson, secretary; and Dave Stanley, publicity secretary.

Trin A Top Skule V Now Tackle SPS I

The amazing School fifths were finally knocked out of the Sifton Cup race yesterday, but they extended the classy Trinity A squad to the limit before wilting decidedly in the final quarter. They led 23-19 at the half, but Trinity fought straight up the hill to a 46-38 win.

SPS. showed a four-man team in Shonk, McNeil, Earling and McGaw that kept up a torrid pace throughout the first three quarters. Their fifth man, Fletcher, tired noticeably at the end of the first stanza; and the whole five were beat to the boot-tops towards the end of the game. McNeil played the best ball, running in 13 points.

The Turner brothers, Rod and Tim, carried most of the play, and used their high one-handed push shots to good effect in breaking through a tight School zone. Bill Gall proved his worth for Trinity with a 16-point job that made it look easy.

Trinity will now meet Sr. S.P.S. in a best two out of three games final series starting tomorrow.

erald of postwar horizons is the Ajax Division of the University, pictured here under a warm March sun. Ajax is the most tangible result of a firm rededication of University aims to the arts of peace, to the cause of thousands of returning students who suffered to make the peace, to the place of a great University in a growing nation.

Throughout the academic year now closing there has been woven a pattern of expansion: mirrored not merely in such tangibles as a second campus, but also in the things undergraduates have thought and done: which things it is The Varsity's business to chronicle.

Dedicated to the University's year of Expansion and Achievement, this special Souvenir Issue of The Varsity seeks to summarize the symptoms and indicate the principles of a crucial period in University history: wherein undergraduates and officials, graduates and teaching staff, may justly take pride.

The Summing-Up

FOR sixty-five years The Varsity has been pouring from the presses. For sixty-five years it has been customary for the current editor to sit down at his typewriter the night before the appearance of Issue No. 1 and realize, in a moment of dismal anticlimax, that he has nothing to write about.

"Like many other customs, that one has changed this year. We are in the precisely contrary dilemma. We have too much to write about."

WITH those words we opened the editorial page of Vol. LXV, No. 1. With similar words we close The Varsity's most momentous volume.

There has never been a year like this one. The University from being a shaping but disregarded influence in the country, has become in a few months a principal and highly publicized architect of the post-war world.

A radio show last fall capitalized on the discomfiture of a blindfolded man ushered into a strange room to sing. Midway through the program the victim, stripped of his blindfold, blinked into the footlights of Carnegie Hall before an audience of thousands.

It is scarcely fanciful to suggest that the fates have played a similar trick on the University. Scholarship, cultivating its obscure gardens, has become suddenly the market-gardener of a culture-hungry world. The University like a bathtub tenor rehearsing his arias for the good of his own soul, has glimpsed the face of an anxious cosmos leering in at the window.

TO the University of Toronto has been entrusted the education of thirty percent of Canada's student veterans.

To the University of Toronto have come the great men of the world: General Eisenhower, strategist of war and propagandist of peace, to receive an honorary degree; and, by a significant juxtaposition, atomic scientists and humanity-shielding scholars, protagonists in man's tragic race to overtake himself on the way to destruction: guests at the installation of the University's President.

To the University of Toronto has fallen the challenge that faces similar crucibles of thought around the globe:

"Tell us where to go lest destruction rain down upon us. Shape us otherwise than as destroyers of ourselves and our works. Show us the things we must worship that will fill up our thoughts and guard us from the heresy of devil-worship. Redeem us in our time."

"We have groped towards truth with everything but our minds. We have put our trust everywhere but in the one trustworthy thing."

"Too late, we have awakened. We do not know what is right, but we know that we have been wrong. We put our trust now in scholars who have striven against the heresy that has all but conquered us: the heresy of not taking thought. We are ready to be taught by those whose business it is to discover and teach."

The ancient and rooted public distrust of universities has melted overnight. People no longer suspect the importance or the integrity of academic institutions, though with human scepticism they reserve the right to question the motives of given groups of students. In the University the public has at last, and willingly, placed a public trust.

Appealed to thus suddenly, the University strove to collect its wits and meet the challenge. Its internal pangs constitute the matter of Volume LXV of The Varsity. We have chronicled a year of expansion, a year of transition. We have chronicled a year wherein the ancient high social function of learning has been recaptured and resumed. We have chronicled the actions of a man, dazed by the threat of unfamiliar conflict, assuming, and repolishing his ancestors' discarded and long-rusted sword.

IT is our inevitable boast that we have done more than chronicle. We have also shaped and moulded. More than any other revolution, a revolution at a University is a revolution within the mind; susceptible to every force that moulds the mind. Of such is the printed word

It is this responsibility that has guided our content this year; especially the content of our editorial page. We cannot pretend to have been always right; but (what is a subtly different thing) we have always firmly believed we were right.

Humbly, then, but firmly (which is a paradox; and our readers will simply have to get used to paradoxes: for they are everywhere) we have combatted what seemed to us the two or three besetting errors of the University's new role. As a man assuming a crushing burden will stagger in every direction before he finds his balance and walks, so, it seemed to us, the University assuming its new burden was in danger of blundering into certain false trails.

THE first of these was intellectual suicide springing from false humility. Men tend to be no longer morally humble, as they should be. They tend to be intellectually humble; which is a mistake. Hence in a whole series of editorials we lambasted the worship of the Open Mind. The Open Mind is valuable, but it is not an end; the mind should be open as a preliminary to closing it on something.

As to what it should be closed on, that is a question for wisdom to decide. Briefly, the principle is that one should preserve from further question the ultimate conclusions of honest thinking. We can well understand the discomfiture of our critics; for most thinking is dishonest.

MOST thinking is dishonest; because most thinking is circular; if one persists in calling such a process thinking. Most writing is mere advocacy; the suppressing of everything that can be said against a conclusion wherein, in his laziness, the talker proposes to repose.

Hence our attack on advocacy, which is the child of laziness, and of nothing more dignified. Hence our much-misinterpreted attack on formal debating, an intellectual exercise which we think can scarcely be defended as a means of reaching truth.

THESE failings, though, false humility and advocacy, are but manifestations of the prime object of our attack; which is laziness of the intellect; the mind fatigued by the mere effort of thought.

The symptom of intellectual laziness is the slogan; what we called the "Witch-word"; the phrase which bewitches men into believing that they understand what they do not understand, or have thought through to a conclusion what they have in fact not thought about at all.

One such witch-word, familiar to everyone, is "democracy". Our evaluation of debates as a means to truth was berated by many readers as "undemocratic"; as though that were sufficient answer.

Our correspondence columns late this spring were likewise deluged with spates of sarcasm and in which antagonists hurled the epithets "fascist" and "communist" at one another; as though those words settled any argument.

It was also our good or ill fortune to seize upon another witch-word commoner in academic circles than elsewhere: "Scientific Method". Our whole quarrel over this term was with its users, who used it dishonestly or slothfully to cover a host of fallacies, or who put a stopper to searching criticism of any technique by proclaiming that it was "scientific" and therefore invulnerable. There are not a few such fools on the faculty.

We never thought, and no line that we have written would justify the charge that we thought, that scientific method is fallacious or dangerous. Throughout the much-controverted editorial in question we enclosed the phrase in inverted commas, to indicate that we were attacking it as a phrase, not as a discipline. In the opening sentence we called it "the subtlest of modern witch-words." We also indicated at some length the broad types of fallacies it was commonly used to cover. We concluded that the term was "not new, except when it is false"; which to any intelligent reader should have meant that it has also a true use, if an old one.

OUR principal attack, then, has been the attack on intellectual laziness; and we believe it has had some measure of success. We have stimulated an unparalleled number of readers to reach for their pens and decry us; which is a victory at least over physical sloth.

The letters, however, have been disturbing; we cannot better sum them up than by saying that every morning's mailbag convinced us more and more that we were right; that our probe had indeed touched the sore spot.

For a disgraceful number of readers refused to think; their letters but manifested that very laziness we were attacking. They threw at us "democracy", "free enquiry", "authoritarianism", "science has proven"—the whole arsenal of witch-words.

They refused to read the words we had written, and which they claimed to deplore. One critic complained that intellectual laziness was a fruit of our educational system; a fact we had just finished demonstrating through three editorials. Another complained that our series on Schooling displayed blindness to the culpability of the social system in building the school system; which was exactly what we had claimed.

Some complained that we were narrow-minded, and demonstrated their own broad-mindedness by refusing to answer our arguments. Others complained that we sat on the fence in a time when it is every man's duty to take sides; missing at a blow the distinction between taking sides and taking a stand, which was the theme of our piece on debating, and the point of all our attacks on the general principle of the open mind.

So we end affirming more loudly than ever what we have always affirmed. At the end of an interesting year we have no regrets. We hope we have done some good.

The Varsity — PER ARDUA AD TABLOID

65 years ago in

The VARSITY

By ELEANOR DICKSON and JOYCE PRATT

It was only 65 years ago when—
A handcart piled high with issues ripped along Bay Street to keep an appointment with the horse-drawn street-car. The bundle was dumped at Mr. Wilkinson's corner, Adelaide and Toronto Street, but students, on payment of five cents, soon devoured the pile of the weekly issue of The Varsity. In contrast to the present eight-page tabloid, full of news, features and cats, The Varsity, Volume 1, Number 1, had a decorative cover-page Greek goddess (could be Minerva), with two gowned and mortar-boarded figures on either side and U.C. in the background. On a scroll at the top right was the content in script writing. A typical scroll was "University Freedom; the Patriarch Student; The International Fisheries Exposition, Berlin; and an editorial on Co-education by William Houston, M.A., Editor-in-Chief."

It was only 65 years ago when—Gentlemen students availed themselves of German study lamps advertised at $4.50 to $5.00, using the best Canadian and American oil.

When—
You couldn't take the girl you'd most like supper dancing to Mac's; or serenade St. Hilda's second floor Juliet, for the logical reason that women were non-existent at University. In spite of the Aunt Abigails of 1880, who felt that co-education would add other excitements to that attendant on the male's pursuit of knowledge, there were broad-minded intellectuals who saw the advantages of women as fellow-students. Before women could walk off with scholarships, legally, a long battle ensued, including arguments such as the following excerpt from the first Varsity editorial:

"Woman is literally, in body, at all events so much the 'weaker vessel' that it would endanger the health of the young ladies to attend the courses of lectures and go through the course of reading presented for young men undergoing collegiate training. By way of proof we point to the many alleged instances of male students who have ruined their constitutions and shortened their lives by too close application to college work."

That was written 65 years ago—the fence is going up, so slick-chicks of 1946, watch those constitutions.

It was definitely 65 years ago when the following ad appeared in
The Varsity:

Club Chamber to Cloister Varsity Office Made Move

By MARTHA SCHOBOR

About a good middle-aged person's lifetime ago, ten ambitious young men got together and formed the Varsity Stock Company. This company published a four-page paper with Chinese lettering on the cover. On the last page in a box it said: "Editorial Rooms in Club
Chambers, York Street, Toronto.
Papers received at Mr. Wilkinson's for five cents, corner Adelaide and Toronto Streets." There was the birth of The Varsity. As to where the paper was actually printed, it did not say.

Four years later an important shareholders' meeting was held, which not only raised the price of The Varsity to ten cents but also moved its editorial headquarters to Moss Hall. This was the name of a building which stood where the Biology Building is now erected.
Moss Hall was actually the old
Medical building set aside as a Students' Union. The staff gathered here in a corner and spent many weary hours trying to balance the budget.

In 1883, when Moss Hall was torn down, The Varsity was faced with the serious problem of a housing shortage. Having had a look at the debit sheet, the Stock Company decided to save its money for wine, women and song, and stopped publication for a year. This was the year that the big fire razed the campus and the paper missed a scop.

The next year we hear of the spirit of The Varsity being revived by the University College Literary and Scientific Society. It had by now become more of a magazine than a newspaper, which went through more acrobatics than even we do today to reach its readers. A horse-drawn cart thumped up to a horse-drawn streetcar at the Pulp Tower.
From there on streetcar 28 careened madly around corners, while other traffic jumped out of the way of this extra-heavy construction job that proudly acclaimed itself as being the "Varsity Special". The poor horses must have been out of breath from the running from King street at 3:30 to Osgoode Hall at 3:45 to McCaul street at 3:50 to catch the southbound streetcar on Baldwin that brought The Varsity to its readers by 4 p.m. at Moss Hall.

As for the editorial rooms during this year, they were in some popular boys' room in the cloister residences, probably house three, just a bit farther on than now, and upstairs.

The fateful year 1892 brought a great change with it. Believe it or not, but the women of the University got their teeth into The Varsity! That meant that a women's office had to be established. The situation—room 82 in the basement of University College.

In the year 1894 The Varsity staffers became athletic and moved into the Gymnasium building in the Students' Union. That is, only the men's office moved. This was the year that the editor was barred and cuts (pictures) first made their appearance.

In the early 1900's the men's office outgrew the residence and established itself in Hart House. The women also moved—to what is now the Alumni Room in the rotunda of the Royal College. A few years later the paper became more newsy and noisy and the women students handed in their first copy under "The College Girl" heading.

As we all know, women are ambitious creatures who worked so hard that they outgrew their location once more and moved to the present room 42A in the cloisters, which had by now changed from a residence to seminars.

Quite recently, in the year 1943, the number of women on the staff of The Varsity had increased so greatly that it was necessary to make one office for both men and women. So the men decided to move into the women's office in University College. Even now this tiny room houses the day office of
The Varsity.

As for the night offices, from 1911 till two months ago, they were located on the second floor of the University Press, where the paper was printed. This year, because of the opening of Ajax, the paper suddenly had to double its circulation and moved from the Press to the Rotary Printing Company at Oshawa.

This left the harassed staff without a roof over their heads, or, to be exact, with no night office. First they tried the Health League of Canada building on Avenue Road, but that was too far to walk. So the weary editors moved, once more, into the core of the this time right into the S.A.C. office in Hart House. But there is a rule against women in Hart House after 6:00 p.m., so the night office was changed to the day office.

But their problems were not solved. For a couple of weeks the office was without a telephone, but since the day phone was taken off the University line and given an independent number, communication has been satisfactory.

So the Varsity staff works from 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. in the same office to put out its daily paper.

Sixty-Five Years Of The Varsity Finds Local Daily's Achievement Top Rank Among College Papers

Rotary Printers Pose No Problems

The culmination of 65 years of expansion, The Varsity jumped this year from a four page, six column newspaper, circulated to approximately 7,500 students and staff members to an eight page tabloid, reaching 11,500 readers. The Varsity now ranks with the largest university newspapers on the continent of North America.

Removal from the University of Toronto press to the Rotary Printing Company, Oshawa has made this jump in circulation possible, as well as an advancement of delivery time across the Toronto campus from late morning to 9:30 a.m. and an Ajax delivery at 8:00 a.m. instead of 5:00 p.m., as was the case when that campus was first opened.

The increase in size was necessitated by the commencement of the new Ajax division of the University, calling for a new area of news and sports coverage, requiring added space in an already crowded-to-capacity paper. It would have been impossible to find room for copy from outside Toronto, when The Varsity had been unable to print all its copy from the Toronto campus alone.

Although an advantage in the new system has been the elimination of night editing, which kept two staff members working for 10 hours, from 10:00 at night to 8:00 in the morning, writing heads, doing make-up and proof-reading, it has put more pressure on the staffers who remained with the paper through its period of transition. Now all copy must be ready, all heads written, and all make-up sketched on the dummy by 11:00 p.m., in order to catch the last bus to Oshawa.

Before the change, copy dribbled in at any time until about 3:30 in the morning; now deadlines are strict and must be adhered to or else. This has produced a concentration of effort which has chiefly devolved on the members of the Masthead, as slowly but surely most of the cub and experienced reporters went the way of all good students and spent most of their time writing essays and doing school work.

"We gave up night-editing with some regret," Hugh Kenner, editor-in-chief, announced "because it was valuable training for the staff to work with the printers in the print-shop. But it was being too much of a drain on the energies of the staff. Merely writing and editing a paper for a campus the size of this one is a full-time job."

"Actually, though we haven't given up anything but the smell of ink. We are writing heads and planning pages exactly as before."

Expansion to Ajax has meant something more than more copies and more stories. It has meant the organization of a complete new staff, including a miniature Masthead at Toronto's annex. All copy has to be co-ordinated by the Toronto staff so that each story is given its true importance, and that room is left for Ajax copy. This has often necessitated direct contact between the two camps, but things have run smoothly to this time.

Shortly Ajax will take over for themselves, producing a four-page bi-weekly issue. It has even been suggested that this continue through the summer months, to include Toronto, to serve those studying in the summer courses.

One last note. For all those readers who wondered why The Varsity departed from its usual fairly white paper to a pale, and sometimes not so pale, green, it is not the complexion of its staff.
The Rotary Press ran out of newsprint as a result of post-war conditions, and so was forced to use a substitute.

SMITH COLLEGE EXCHANGE

Second Year women interested in the Smith College Exchange Plan should consult their respective Deans of Women at once. The Committee in charge is anxious to have as soon as possible, a list of all those who would be prepared to go to Smith for the coming session, if recommended for the exchange.

From Magazine To Newspaper

By Blanche Stanley

Never let it be said that The Varsity has remained the same during its 65 years as the undergraduate newspaper for the University of Toronto. During this time it has passed through many stages of development to reach its present tabloid form, from a small size paper, to a six column, slightly less than full size, issue, to an eight-page.

The Varsity Stock Company launched the first issue of the paper in 1880-81 when 500 students picked it up weekly at "Mr. Wilkinson's, corner of Adelaide and Toronto Sts." for five cents each.

Having shown a profit in the previous year, the University of Toronto publication revamped its layout and organization in 1883 and raised its price to 10 cents. After two years of development, the "The Weekly Review of Education, University Politics and Events" began to be less a newspaper and more a literary magazine.

In 1888 the Joint Stock Company dropped its subscription rates from two dollars to one dollar annually, hoping to increase circulation, but it suffered loss by adopting this plan. Consequently, in 1890 the Joint Stock Company succumbed to financial stress and discontinued activities.

Next year the University College Literary and Scientific Society took over, making it an undergraduate newspaper. Trouble arose in 1895, however, when The Varsity was forced to undergo a Royal Commission investigation which made its policy decidedly conservative for the following year.

The first women's copy went into
The Varsity under the head "The College Girl", in 1897.

The Varsity first assumed newspaper status with a four-column format and screaming headlines when it was taken over by the University of Toronto Union in 1908, at the same time becoming a bi-weekly. In 1911 The Varsity became a tri-weekly and moved to the University of Toronto Press.

At last, in 1915, the paper grew to its semi-final stage, the six column size; and two years later women students joined the Masthead.
And still the paper grew. In 1918 a column called Campus Chat appeared on Page Two and became Champus Cat the next day. The Art, Music and Drama column also appeared for the first time that same year.

The Varsity finally hit the daily stage in 1923, published five times a week by the Students' Administrative Council.

In 1931 The Varsity celebrated its fiftieth anniversary by picking fights with everyone in sight. It took on the S.A.C., the Board of Governors, the downtown press, the police, members of the staff, and students. An editorial which asserted that the majority of the staff were practical atheists finally brought action from the authorities.
The S.A.C. suspended The Varsity and published their own news bulletins for several days until the harmless 20 pages of the Anniversary Issue appeared.

Perhaps the greatest step was taken this year, 1946, when it was decided to move publication to Oshawa, to a professional newspaper office. The great increase in student registration necessitated the move, because of the impossibility of printing enough copies of the paper at the University Press.

Magic In Numbers Says Varsity Staff

Proverbially a superstitious tribe, journalists everywhere are addicted to the rabbit's foot, the lucky pin, the thirteenth century.

With the staff of The Varsity it's numbers.

For them, no luckier break has ever befallen than the switch-over, early this spring, to tabloid format, high-speed presses, prompt delivery, and no more night editing.

The move took place midway in the 65th year of publication: to be exact, with the 65th, issue.

Felicitations...

In the name of the University, I extend to The Varsity felicitations on its attaining the advanced but vigorous age of sixty-five years. For over six decades, The Varsity has recorded the hopes and the aspirations, the progress and the achievements of the University. The undergraduate newspaper, before this session, has never carried stories of such rapid expansion with its attendant problems.
For its interpretation of the University to its shareholders, the public; for the performance of its obligation to represent the varied views of the students; and for the success in its endeavours to welcome to our midst ex-service personnel and to have them feel that they have much to contribute to the welfare of the institution, we express our gratitude. In no small measure, The Varsity has promoted the integration of the Ajax Division with the Queen's Park Campus. In this federated institution with the rich diversity of colleges, faculties, schools and institutes, The Varsity has played, particularly during this period of an unparalleled registration, a significant role in promoting that spirit of unity that does not decrease but rather enhances the traditions and ideals of the several parts. The columns of The Varsity have not been devoted to chit-chat. Through its editorials, in its news pages, and by means of its correspondence section, it has stimulated hard thinking about fundamental issues inherent in the securing of the blood-bought peace and the building of a Canada and a world of decency and order. That is the stuff of true education—education that is self-started and self-propelled.

By Ross McLean
Brin Powell for half a century had been a stone carver. For fifty years he had enjoyed a monopoly on such work as one of two free-lance craftsmen in Toronto. This was nothing new to him. Deftly, he set about the task.

Standing before the marble wall in Simcoe Hall, his work at eye-level ("to see how you're going"), garrulous Brin Powell had carefully drawn the guide lines on the stone with a hard pencil. He had then sketched in the outlines of the letters—adding "Chancellor" to Dr. Cody's list of degrees and titles, introducing the names of Dr. Sidney Smith and Col. W. E. Phillips, new chairman of the Board of Governors.

The lettering completed, Powell had then taken small, iron hammer and chisel in hand to chip out the letters. Over the cut-out letters he had painted a special gold solution, followed by a special black paint. Sandpaper applied to the surface swiftly erased all paint but that in the engraved letters.

As Powell chipped nonchalantly away at the plaques last week, his busy hammer sent echoes reverberating through the Hall. Passersby, hearing and seeing the stone-carver performing his duties, were acutely aware that somewhere nearby an era had ended, another begun.

In the University of Toronto's log-book the chapter covering the term '45-'46 was plain.

Chronicling an historic semester the still keen-sighted, sixty-five-year-old Varsity had:

Watched Holwood, Ajax and war-recessed intercollegiate sports open, the Hart House pool room close.

Noted fastidiously that the average student walked seven miles a day and could, by beginning now, reach the moon in 80 years. There were no takers.

Announced triumphantly that a certain George Dimson had taken over the Oposonia, rechristened it the St. George Grill upon the whim of a sign-painter, and had boldly thrown away the tattered "Under New Management" placard which had been so steadily a part of the Oposonia window display. Downcast, watched Mr. Dimson sell out too.

Recorded a book shortage, a room shortage and the end of a man shortage.

Introduced a pair of Pass Arts twins—Birdie and Betty Tate—one of whom was business-like and the other happy-go-lucky, failed to stipulate which.

Allowed Mike Hornyansky to expose the myth of his brilliance, revealed that the Reuben Wells Leonard scholarship winner was quite ordinary scholastically.

Welcomed Phoebe Taylor, Sally McDevitt, Annie Ar-back and Barbara Tomb, ex-changes from Smith College, reported that they had expected Canadian women to be stuffy, wear elbow-length gloves to dinner. About Canada the Massachusetts misses early observed: "You can pronounce every name on your rugby team" and "Union Station has the nicest baggage man!"

Watched university debaters, after a war-wary and gagged relapse, once again tread bare-foot across the hot coals of controversy, discuss the Palestine and the Pass Arts problems, consider whether comic strips and Conservatism were good things.

Divulged that the President enjoyed reading Little Orphan Annie, anyway.

Printed a poem by jet-propulsion expert and staff member E. A. Alcott: "And in the air atomic planes are plentiful as railroad trains, while eyes protrude beyond their sockets in following atomic rockets."

Recited the cross-country bicycle and thumb expeditions of two sets of travellers: Dormer Ellis and Beverly Meredith and Jack Shapiro, Bob Marjoribanks and Sid Jourard.

Interviewed University Carillon J. Leland Richardson and from him learned that his V-J Day Hart House recital was his second armistice performance. In 1918 the young Leland had run down to a neighborhood blacksmith's shop where hung a cracked bell and had "banged away for all I was worth".

Reviewed the sprightly series of campus productions, greeted with special fervor the reincarnation of Medsman Daffydil.

Reported the outer-world actions of university students who picketed in turn the Imperial Optical Company, Brown Bread, a North Toronto skating arena, and (although never literally) Mary Nowak. Deplored vandalism.

Spoken fifth M. A. Omar who had come from the University of Cairo to attend the installation ceremonies of our eighth president.

Pleaded with members of the graduating years to hand in their biography card to the editor of Torontonensis.

Deplored vandalism.

Joined a watch-weary cordon of volunteer Varsity guards, on duty at the stadium to prevent Queen's desecration of the grounds, eye-witnessed the punishment of trio of Kingston captives.

Encouraged campaigns to collect clothing for Europe, to collect money for I.S.S. and the University of Amsterdam.

Pumped for a Varsity hat, suggested several patterns, watched the slap-apathy of student reaction.

Observed that the Lee Collection had been presented to Hart House, blithely informed its readers that the collection included a number of tazzas, wondered later what were tazzas.

Met two pairs of good-will ambassadors from the Universities of Montreal and British Columbia, heard both remark on Toronto traffic. Said André Bissonette and Charles Lussier of the U. of M.: Toronto pedestrians are better behaved. "It is the discipline!" said U. of B.'s Mardie Dundas and Marian Ball: "In Vancouver we have bells as traffic signals."

Paid birthday tribute to Dr. John Satterley, honored on his 66th by his first year physics class who presented him with a box of chalk, a "small boy" and a cake with a single squat candle. (The number 65 had been declared an arbitrary zero.)

Recorded thoroughly the campus sentiments on Japanese-Canadian deportation.

Discovered that Rhodes Scholar Bob Aldwinckle of Varna, Ont., was still wearing a pair of Dr. Scholl arch supports to see if they would last as long as guaranteed.

Lamented the disappearance of a bathtub plug, the standards of radio humor as attacked by Shuster and Wayne, announced that the entire graduating class in Household Science hadn't been lonely. Not at all, testified Miss Mary Broadley, it.

Splashed in Hush-like fashion the amorous escapades of Don Harron across five front pages as publicity buildup to the annual Moot Court hearings at which Barbara Flint this year sued Harron for breach of promise.

Turned tabloid.

Publicized Dodie Robinette as the Girl We Would Most Readily Skip A Lecture To Have a Coke-Date With.

Celebrated the silver anniversary of Trinity College's Porter Bob.

Considered suitable war memorials, published the S.A.C. proposal regarding a co-educational centre, waited, waited.

Received its readers' support via a questionnaire which showed that The Varsity was as good or better according to 92%.

Followed several causes: a campus radio station, a women's Hart House, better library lighting, better library, an international house.

Published a hideous typographical faux pas which stated: "The list of broken-down candidates for office according to (Hart House) committees is as follows."

Turned nomad in constant quest of night office accommodation roamed from the Press, to the Health League, to the S.A.C. office, to University College's Room 42A.

Waxed ecstatic as crocuses bloomed on the Trinity College lawn on March 4.

Followed Miss Varsity — Jean Macdonald of Victoria — about Toronto on a royal tour.

Deplored vandalism. Finally wrote 30 to an unusual year.

Veterans — FROM KHAKI TO CAMPUS

By Wally Belfry

What lay behind it all—This Year of Expansion? Could the year's campus characteristic be found, named, and described?

No needle in haystack was this—just a forest that couldn't be seen for the trees. Most obvious was the factor moulding us into (as annals will say) The Year of Expansion. Yes, the year's eccentricities evolved from that still-growing body of returned servicemen.

Who were they, how did they fare—these too-easily grouped student veterans? What would be their fate, their problems, and what the solution?

Read on . . .

None might have foreseen that 30% of the dominion's student veterans would choose the University of Toronto. Official sources had been worried predicting a registration of 13,000 by next year. The estimate was reached in January; D.V.A. sounded the next gloom-note predicting 30,000 by September 1946.

Explosives-plant Ajax un-powdered its nose, inhaled 1,700 potential engineers to tide it over until the autumn rush. Convocation Hall became a perpetual class-room, proved infinitely more satisfactory than the many hallways used as lecture-space.

The first year absorbed, sponge-like, the majority. The veteran was a freshman. Chuckles of well-being said "I go to school 25 hours a week free and even get paid $60 a month!" His pay continued throughout his college career—a month for every month he had served.

But January saw Canada's student veterans represented in 1)—a brief to the government asking maintenance increases to $80 for single, $120 for married men. 2)—a housing survey deploring present conditions.

Yes, there were problems peculiar to veterans. Well, "Were they," asked the S.A.C. Vets Committee, "satisfied with representation by a co-opted committee until autumn elections?"

Overwhelmingly (900-60), they were satisfied.

And co-eds had but one complaint—"They should make the married ones wear signs saying . . ."

This mass of maturity had left an effect legible: "more" was demanded of the campus so a fourth political club was formed; the undergraduate daily became one of the world's largest; another publication was distributed; the first all-campus stage show shook staid old Convocation Hall.

But what of the future?

Rehabilitation could be effected. Next September's sophomores were happy in anticipation—for the individual . . .

. . . And for the campus?

Experience made the talent trend of the next five years so sharp it pointed an arrow into the future.

IMPORTANT!

Ajax carries and publishes The Varsity after March 26th. Meeting of all Varsity Staff and others interested in The Varsity Office, Hart House Ajax, Mon. Mar. 18 at 7.00 p.m.

Ajax Open House

A cordial invitation is extended by the President to all members of the University, students, staff, and graduates, to visit the Ajax division on Saturday, March 23.

Visitors will be taken on conducted tours through the classrooms, laboratories, drafting rooms, Hart House Ajax, Residences, the Hospital, and the Recreation Building.

The date: March 23. (One week from tomorrow).

The time: 2.00 to 5.00 p.m. for conducted tours.

The idea: An invitation from the Ajax campus to all members of the Toronto campus.

I.S.S. Campaign

A total of $5,788.07 has been raised so far in the recent drive conducted by International Student Service to raise money for student relief according to I.S.S. Chairman June Wong. Still to come are donations from fraternities, the Board of Governors, several campus organizations and private donations.

Complete figures to date are:
Tag Day $2,009.46
Ajax 168.00
Staff 815.61
Delta Gamma Fraternity (Anchor Ball) 800.00
All-varsity Revue 2,000.00

Ajax — FROM SHELLWOMEN TO SKULEMEN

By George Forster

IN the late summer of 1941, after an expenditure of $112,000,000, the huge Ajax shell-filling plant of Defense Industries Limited commenced operations. In addition to the plant proper, a complete town had been constructed on what had previously been a bleak stretch of the Lake Ontario coastline; 600 houses, built by Wartime Housing Ltd., a central heating plant, stores, Hydro, fire-hall, post-office and all the other requisites of a self-contained community.

For four years a steady stream of shells and munitions poured out of Ajax to the allied armies in all corners of the world. Finally, on Aug. 15, 1945, the huge plant shut down. With the exception of a few maintenance men, what had once been a hive of industry became overnight a deserted warehouse.

The Board of Governors of the University of Toronto had for some time been looking for additional facilities to cope with the expected influx of servicemen. Applications for enrollment were assuming astounding dimensions and made it quite plain that the facilities at Queen's Park—already strained to the utmost—would be completely inadequate to handle the number of students who would be arriving in the fall.

Throughout the summer the search went on — several possible sites ranging from former Air Force Equipment Depots to Air Observer Schools were considered but all proved unobtainable or unsatisfactory. Finally, with the co-operation of provincial and federal authorities arrangements were completed whereby the University took over a considerable section — four times the size of the home campus — of Ajax to be used as an annex to the Faculty of Applied Science. The job of transformation was enormous—buildings were converted into classrooms, laboratories and residences. Arrangements had to be made for commuters' bus service, for a shuttle between residences and classrooms over a mile apart, an Ajax version of Hart House, for athletics and recreation, for a cafeteria capable of feeding more than 1500 students in less than an hour.

BEFORE: Ajax was producing for victory then, buzzing round the clock with the work of D.I.L. employees. In the hands of the girl above is the 25 millionth shell, produced at Ajax in September 1944.

AFTER: Still producing for victory, but this time the enemy is ignorance. It'll be a long time till the 25 millionth Schoolman, but now it's not quantity that counts.

J. R. Gilley, Comptroller of Hart House since 1932, was appointed Director of the new division. Professor W. J. T. Wright of S.P.S. became Supervisor of Studies.

On Jan. 7 registration commenced. More than 1500 potential Ajaxes crowded into the St. George Drill Hall of the C.O.T.C. to enroll in the new division, and one week later classes commenced.

Late in January students elected their house executives and then almost immediately swung into elections for an Ajax Engineering Society. Elections were conducted with all the back-slapping, hand-shaking and boisterousness that have become an integral part of Skule elections. Michael McAuliffe emerged victorious as president and Ajax's representative on the Students' Administrative Council.

To keep both divisions in touch with happenings on the other—The Varsity extended its coverage to Ajax with a staff under Ajax Editor McAuliffe.

Highlight of Ajax's career as an academic institution came on Feb. 16 when Ajax held "Open House" for the citizens of Ontario County. More than 2,500 people were taken on conducted tours and later attended a banquet with Premier George Drew as guest speaker.

Next year, the expansion of Ajax will continue. All first and second year courses will be given at Ajax, with only the two final years at Toronto. The future of Ajax is unknown, but it is expected to remain an integral part of the University of Toronto for a long time.

A DAY AT AJAX

By PETE PHILPOTT

Gunther Budcoo is, of course, a fictitious name but is not a fictitious person for Gunther embodies in his soul all the manly virtues and as Ajax boasts nine girls he combines womanly purity. Thus Gunther is representative of a typical Ajax student.

Let us see how an Ajax day unfolds for our hero.

The process of getting up is an art in itself, for it involves manipulating heating valves and shutting the one window which serves as a wall in his ten by fifteen domicile. Naturally this operation starts early so that by 8.30 Gunther is ready to spread the dirt on his face more evenly, water his dandruff and comb his beard.

Ten to nine finds our hero standing in line for his breakfast reading the exploits of Dick Tracy over the shoulder of some wealthy plutocrat who can afford to squander three cents on a paper. Fried eggs, on toast, bread and butter, milk, and a cereal brimming over with vitamins, is the menu.

Five minutes later (two minutes to nine) Gunther has finished breakfast, essential vitamins are flowing through his veins, his brain is clear for the big event—boarding the last bus for lectures.

Apparently his army training has stood our friend in good stead for at 9.10 the grey horse wagon draws up in front of 313-B—a building three quarters of a mile from the cafeteria—and Gunther, backed by one hundred occupants of the bus, leads a charge on the day's lectures.

There are nine buildings all connected with covered steel passageways raised above the ground by stilts. Along the corridors windows open upon sunny fields, and little brooks tinkle down to the bright blue lake in the distance, beneath an azure blue sky.

The lecture rooms are well lighted and comfortable. Over what goes on inside them we draw a veil.

Lunchtime. The big grey bus moves off carrying its heavy load. As an engineer Gunther applies his knowledge by co-operating with seventy other students in lightening the bus with hot gasses from seventy pipes. Anyone who smokes a pipe is bound by tradition to attend university, so Gunther lights his pipe in hopes that if he cannot remain at Ajax on his marks, tradition will see him through. All too soon the bus stops, the doors are flung open and a mad dash is made for places in the cafeteria line-up. All dead bodies are collected on the spot and used as fertilizer on the Rugby Field.

The afternoon lectures are much the same as the morning so we will wait in Hart House for Gunther's return. The Common Room is at all times decorated by original paintings and magazines of every description are on the tables.

The Hart House Library is a large green room lighted by sunken fluorescent lighting. The Tuck Shop is certainly the meeting place of the Campus. It has even been proposed that this sixty by fifty foot room be used for lectures as the comfortable chairs soon put the student to sleep, allowing the lecturers to teach by mass hypnotism.

Hart House is still under construction; the Music Room, last of the projects, will be finished in a month.

Well look who's here! It's Gunther, up for a chocolate bar. After putting over the big deal, he wanders back to his residence. These are 'U' Huts of frame construction, covered with asbestos-board. Our friend opens the door and without removing his boots, which have already heralded the approach of Spring by sprouting Crocuses in the rich Ajax mud which encrusts them, he joins a game of croquignole in the Common Room while listening to a soap-opera on the House Radio paid for by the students in the hut.

After supper Gunther sits down to study. And it is possible to study if you wish for his house has set Quiet Hours between seven and ten as study time; or if you wish to kibitz there is always the common room at the far end of the hut.

Shhhh! Gunther has decided to study, so read quietly! The studious students have a study room in each wing of the residence lighted by a large hanging fluorescent light and under this we find eight fellows engrossed in finding the force exerted by an aeroplane of negligible weight traveling at nine miles per hour hitting a ten by six by thirty foot pole of negligible weight if the price of corn on the Peruvian Market is three pesos.

After solving this interesting problem, Gunther joins the boys in a little refreshment—coffee brewed in a pot supplied by the House over an element bought by the University and stirred with University spoons. Gunther belongs to a group which is notorious for taking five pieces of bread per person at supper but this all goes to that glorious three-hour snack. The students realize that a university is a place for learning so old army songs are sung, jokes are improved, and the psychology of women is touched upon.

The songs have all been sung, the jokes have been retold, the women problem is left unsolved for tomorrow, and the food is all gone, so Gunther and his partners in crime meander off to bed after adding more hair-growing oil to their faces. As each student pulls the covers over himself a murmur of Toikie Oike arises, showing that although they are twenty five miles from Toronto, they still approve of the Ajax Annex at Queens Park.

The Ajax Varsity Appears March 26

A four-page bi-weekly paper will be published Tuesdays and Fridays for the Ajax division of the University from late March until late June, according to a decision reached last Wednesday by the Ajax Varsity staff in collaboration with the Students' Administrative Council. The paper will be written and edited entirely by Ajaxians, and will run four pages per issue.

Earlier announcements featured a daily Ajax paper, but as complication after complication arose the plans were subjected to almost daily scrutiny and revision.

Principal factor in the decision to retrench to a bi-weekly was the comparative smallness of the Ajax campus, and the consequent difficulty of filling a daily paper with news.

The Ajax staff, furthermore, have as little spare time as any other Engineers. Their heavy time-tables permit only two or three hours' concentrated work on the paper daily.

Hugh Kenner is expected to continue as supervising editor. The first Ajax Varsity will appear on Tuesday, March 26.

Eisenhower— THE VISITOR OF THE YEAR AT VARSITY

By Ross McLean

THE red and pink robes of a Doctor of Laws covering his beribboned battle dress, General Dwight David Eisenhower stood before two thousand people in Convocation Hall and received from the University of Toronto its highest honour. "One of the earth's great ones," as Chancellor H. J. Cody had called him, today had become an energetic "apostle and propagandist of peace."

The General spoke of peace with the fervour of one who had known war. The world's greatest warrior had become, rightfully, its most devout salesman of peace.

"There is no legitimate road toward the goal of permanent peace that we will not attempt to travel. . . . We have seen the ugliness, the suffering, the terrible cost of war. . . . I pledge every support possible in my poor power to education everywhere as it carries on its rightful role in this glorious universal crusade."

The world, the General declared, had become "a small neighbourhood. Our civilization has reached a brink from which the prospect is a thousand times more terrifying than anything we have seen. . . . Until there is a surging flow of mutual understanding and tolerance in the minds and hearts of men everywhere, the assurance of peace will not be firm. . . . Behind him on the platform sat the leaders of higher education in their robes of gold and crimson and blue velvet which bore testimony to academic honours paid them by seats of learning. In front and above him in the galleries were faculty members, students and persons from all walks of life.

In a front seat sat his wife, visibly moved by the ritual of donning the hood and by her husband's words. Splendour and informality mingled easily in the traditional ceremonies by which General Eisenhower received the doctorate, honoris causa. An unwilling hero, he displayed throughout his visit to the University of Toronto the unaffected simplicity and humility of the genuinely great.

The explosion of a photographer's flash bulb with a sound like a pistol shot provoked a smile from the General. The interruption came while Dr. Smith was presenting him to the Chancellor for his degree. Outwardly undisturbed, the Presi-

Ajax At Home

"The first time will be the best time" is the claim of Gord. Beatty, first vice-president of the Ajax Engineering Society, as he makes the final arrangements for the First Annual Ajax Year Dance, to be held on Tuesday next, March 19th, at the Royal York.

Music for the semi-formal dance will be by Art Hallman and his orchestra. Dancing will be from 9:00 to 1:00, and intermission will see a sensational floor-show, featuring Joe Murphy as Emcee and impersonator extraordinaire, Zena Cheevers in her nationally famous dances, and the novel hand-balancing act of Art and Vera.

The date bureau organized for the dance received four times as many female applications as male, nevertheless today (Friday) is the absolute deadline for remaining "lonesome lads". Lyon Sacks, Residence 734, is the man to get in touch with.

Special transportation has been arranged and students are asked to note particularly that only return tickets for use on these busses alone will be sold. Busses leave Ajax at 6:30 p.m. and return from the Royal York at 3:00 a.m. stopping, on the return trip, only at Bay and Bloor and again at Danforth and Main. Bus tickets are on sale at Ajax Engineering Society Stores today (Friday) only, at $1.00 per person.

The few remaining tickets for the dance are on sale at S.A.C. offices and Engineering Society Stores on both camps.

Finnegans Wake Instalment 999

The scene is laid in the kitchen of the O'Toole's cottage. Mary Cassidy is baking a cake and there is a strong smell of burning glue. The rest of the cast is out looking for Finnegan who has been missing for three weeks. Mrs. Murphy discovered that he was missing when she went to feed him gruel and found the coffin empty except for his butterfly net and his fraternity pin . . .

There is a sudden commotion at the door and in walks the entire cast of Wuthering Heights.

Heathcliffe: (recklessly) I'm going away to America to make my fortune (he goes out, and the rest of the cast follow him because they shouldn't be there anyway but back on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot where they came from).

Mary Cassidy: (disconsolately) I can't understand what's the matter with my cake. I'm sure I put the correct amount of powdered seaweed in. (She hits the cake with an axe but it is no use since chrome-vanadium steel is unobtainable in Eire . . . There is a commotion at the door and in walks the entire cast of Finnegans Wake headed by a duck-billed platypus who wanted to get into the final issue).

James Joyce: (throwing his manuscript into the fire) I'm fed up working. What I need is a good rest by the sea.

Finnegan: I've lost me coffin. I hear that there aren't going to be any more Champus Cats this year. Is that what the rest of you hear? (they listen carefully and agree that they hear the same thing).

O'Shaughnessy: (obstinately) I can't hear anything (Finnegan hands him a sea-shell and tells him to listen to it. O'Shaughnessy listens carefully and hears that there aren't going to be any more Champus Cats this year).

Mrs. Murphy: Pass some of your cake around to the company Mary (Mary does so, but they all politely refuse saying that they have just eaten).

Mary Cassidy: (in tears) Everybody's against me. I'm going to jump over the cliff and end it all (O'Shaughnessy opens the door for her).

Mary Cassidy: (in a huff) You're just trying to get rid of me so you can have my share of the cake.

O'Toole: Surely you jest.

Mary Cassidy: I jest what?

Joyce: (in a hurry) If there's any punning to be done here it will be done somewhere else.

Bouboul: (obsequiously) I'm with you there Mr. Joyce.

Mrs. O'Toole: (excitedly) Here comes the postman with a letter.

Mrs. Mulligan: What letter is it?

Mrs. Murphy: It's the letter Q. I can see it from here (there are groans all round since they had hoped it would be the letter S).

Captain Brandy: It's not the postman — it's a member of the Ogu (and so it is. His name is Fiodor Ostrokoft).

Ostrokoft: (entering the room with a flourish of crumpets) Where is it?

O'Shaughnessy: Where is what? Ostrokoft: The new armor plate that is impervious to the atomic bomb.

O'Shaughnessy: (eyes lighting up) Well for goodness sake (he seizes Mary Cassidy's cake and dashes out with it followed by Ostrokoft who is cursing him in Russian and the rest of the cast who have just gone along for the excitement, Finnegan alone remains).

Finnegan: Where am I to sleep tonight? Me coffin is lost. (But they do not hear him. Already they are on their way to the War Office aboard the "Irish Queen". Night is falling, and in the third-class saloon there is a poker game going on for big stakes and lamb chops. Ostrokoft is sitting with the armor plate, but he is fighting a losing game since O'Shaughnessy has secretly removed all the caraway seeds).

AND YOU KNOW WHAT THAT MEANS!

—JAKE.

Eisenhower

dent had not paused in his remarks. He had the day before conferred with the R.C.M.P. inspector in charge of precautions to prevent a crank assassination attempt. "Not very likely," the mountie felt, "but, well—" Inwardly, at the explosion Dr. Smith's thoughts had been: "Here it is, and I'm in the line of fire!"

The General had sought Dr. Smith's permission to have a newsreel record portions of his Convocation address. "If you don't mind," he had asked. "I have this message to get across."

To the three radio commentators carrying an airwave description of ceremonies to listening thousands was added the newsreel camera. In order to permit the cameraman to make the film recording, Chancellor Cuddy had requested the capacity audience to remain seated after Convocation had been dismissed.

"Convocatio demissus est," Canon Cuddy intoned.

"Now," he added, "stay where you are."

As laughter faded, the General stepped to the rostrum to re-deliver three excerpts from his speech. "I can assure you, ladies and gentlemen," he quipped, "this is not a try-out for Hollywood."

In his remarks the General expressed the world's sole hope as "to allow the cleansing spring of knowledge" to flow over the "dark ground of prejudice, fear and hysteria, the soil in which the evil seeds of war flourish."

Education, he asserted, must accept a broad responsibility for nurturing a better understanding of the complexities of international co-operation.

Entertained at Luncheon

At the Hart House luncheon which preceded Convocation, Gen. Eisenhower caused laughter to sweep across the Great Hall when he observed: "To say that Mrs. Eisenhower and myself are overwhelmed is to be guilty of the rank, est kind of British understatement."

At the front tables in the Hall sat fifty student-veterans representing the University's thousands who had served under him. The U.S. Chief of Staff made reference to these. He pointed out the values of considering them as instructors to those who have escaped an immediate knowledge of war.

Ten of these ex-servicemen had met the General before luncheon. Six-footer Capt. C. S. Ross, among them, confessed surprise at discovering himself taller than his former supreme commander. Squadron Leader Donald MacFadyen was also introduced. "If you know anything about the mathematics of meeting people," he told the press later when it inquired concerning the General's remarks, "then you'll know that the fourth in line always gets shaken hands with." MacFadyen was fourth in line.

Admittedly pleased at the General's visit to his alma mater was one renowned alumnus. "I am sharing your delight," wired Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King to President Smith.

And especially pleased was the University itself at the recognition afforded it by the General's visit. The sting of humiliation had been salvaged. No longer important was the fact that a certain canary-raising tank General had never heard of this University. His boss most emphatically had.

"Again I express my gratitude for the great distinction awarded me by this University, which I assure you, I have heard about before!" Ike told the luncheon gathering with his impish five-star smile.

The mocking remark of Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery had, incidentally, been made just a few days before the announcement of Eisenhower's impending visit. Upon receipt of a despatch reporting Montgomery from their correspondent Ralph Allen, the Toronto Globe and Mail had contacted the President for comment.

The story quoted Montgomery, soon to be honoured by McGill, as saying: "McGill is a famous university . . . I understand it is (Canada's) outstanding university . . . I must confess that I have never heard of the University of Toronto." "Never," confessed Dr. Smith, "was I more tempted to release a story ahead of schedule than when I heard that." The President however refrained from announcing then that Monty's boss Ike had heard of Toronto and was to receive her degree.

"Why," my colleagues asked me, "didn't you retort: Who is this Montgomery?" the President continued.

"But how can such a question as that ever be solemnly asked by a Smith?"

Installation — DEGREES AND DIGNITARIES

By Ross McLean

WITH pomp unparalleled in its history, the University of Toronto played host to the world on the occasion of the installation of its eighth President on November 9th and 10th.

Outside Convocation Hall a grey, November afternoon gave no hint of the colourful proceedings within, where the man from Nova Scotia stood before an assemblage of the world's most erudite and repeated the oath of his office.

"I, Sidney Earle Smith," he intoned with his usual vigour, "pledge myself to perform the duties of the President of the University of Toronto as prescribed by law and by the statutes of the University; and I promise to defend the rights and to promote the welfare of the University and the members thereof."

While a cluster of bulb-flashing photographers hurried from the wings, Principal Taylor of University College, Dean Gallie of the Faculty of Medicine and Dean Young of Applied Science and Engineering, heads of three of the institution's largest faculties and College, moved forward on the dais to assist the President to remove his academic costume and to robe him in the blue and silver gown and silver-tasseled black velvet cap of the President of the University of Toronto.

In greeting the President, Dr. Beatty, Dean of the Faculty of Arts, hoped that Dr. Smith would not set out to be the perfect President. Rather, he suggested, might the new President's mistakes serve to illuminate his path. To this, Dr. Smith smiled assent.

August, awesome, there sat in tiers behind the newly-installed President a richly-garbed array of world academicians. Distinguished delegates from many North American universities and major universities throughout the world filled the platform and banks of the Hall, wearing their multi-coloured robes and hoods, providing a dazzling kaleidoscope.

The installation and investiture of authority had been performed by the Chairman of the Board of Governors, Col. Eric Phillips, in accordance with the University Act of 1906, prior to the ceremony of the donning of the official robes.

Installation Address

Relating his advice to what he termed "the latest and most alarming discovery, the means of unleashing the power of the atom" which he felt had "the portent of utter tragedy or high hope," Dr. Smith in his installation address suggested that universities could "assist immeasurably in putting the inventions and discoveries of the twentieth century to use for good and not for evil purposes."

"The battle of ideas still rages within and among the nations," he declared. "Its battleground is the hearts and minds of youth."

"In that battle," he said, "universities have a special stake. Will they train a corps d'élite for it? Not, he maintained, if they are to be mainly concerned with the training of men and women for vocations and professions."

"There are ideals which are not relative to time and place," he pointed out. "The physical scientist puts forward hypotheses whose validity depends on the constant presence of certain factors. In a naturalistic mood, we have carried over into our study of man's relations with his fellow men and with his God this attitude of relativity."

"May it be suggested that an adoption by some Arts departments of the so-called scientific method of the physicist, who works with pointed readings on a mathematically-graduated scale, has obscured the humanity of the humanities and discounted the social aspects of the social sciences?"

"The human and social aspects of our civilization cannot be computed in milligrams or kilocycles."

"Are not the Arts faculties in Canadian universities, in some instances, concerned with professional or quasi-professional objectives to the detriment of their major mission of developing students who will be defenders of human freedom, examples of human dignity and apostles of human values?"

"We should not," he urged in concluding this point, "concede without extreme caution the pressing claims of those who would place at the under-graduate level new professional or quasi-professional courses. If such offerings merit recognition by universities, they should be placed in the post-baccalaureate field."

Education was more than "an increased expertness," he stressed. "The word has to do with man's moral, as well as his intellectual development. The end of learning is not knowledge, but virtue."

The university's role was more than to develop intellect. "Intellectualism may become so sterile," he warned, "that it no longer produces builders, but rather destructive critics. Ideals, ideas and facts are equally the business of universities."

"In the cauldron of war, all of us—and perhaps to the greatest extent the men and women of the Armed Services—have apprehended more clearly ideals which cannot be demonstrated in the laboratory of the physical scientist or verified by rational process."

The true University, the President observed, is heir to the bountiful traditions of the free mind and the free spirit. The University of Toronto, with roots deep in Canadian soil, ought to continue to express the loftiest aspirations of Canadians.

"It has become an institution for the whole of Canada." That remark, he said, was made without any "institutional conceit." The University of Toronto he envisioned as an even greater unifying force in the Dominion in the future.

In addition to the delegates of 135 universities and twelve learned societies and foundations, including the Rockefeller and the Guggenheim Foundations, there were also many distinguished individual guests in attendance for the installation ceremony and the conferring of honorary degrees which followed.

King Represented

As representative of the King, His Excellency The Honourable Thibault Rinfret, Administrator of the Government of Canada during the temporary vacancy of the Governor Generalship, was present. The Province was represented by its Lieutenant-Governor, The Honourable Albert Matthews and Mrs. Matthews, Premier George A. Drew and Mrs. Drew, and other cabinet ministers.

Dignitaries of the United, Presbyterian and Baptist Churches, Salvation Army and Hebrew faith, Anglican and Roman Catholic Archbishops, representatives of the Bench and civic officials were also among the honoured guests.

The six recipients of the degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa), were: John Douglas Cockcroft, M.A., Ph.D., M.Sc., F.R.S., Jacksonian Professor of Natural Philosophy, University of Cambridge; James Bryant Conant, A.B., Ph.D., S.D., L.H.D., D.C.L., D.Sc., President of Harvard University; The Honourable George Alexander Drew, K.C., Prime Minister and Minister of Education of the Province of Ontario; Frank Cyril James, B.Com., M.A., Ph.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Principal and Vice Chancellor of McGill University; Norman Archibald MacRae MacKenzie, K.C., B.A., LL.B., LL.M., LL.D., F.R.S.C., President of the University of British Columbia; The Reverend James Sutherland Thomson, M.A., D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.C., President of the University of Saskatchewan and President of the National Conference of Canadian Universities.

Requested by the Chancellor to address Convocation, President Conant offered a single solution to the ominous potentialities of those atomic discoveries in which he had shared.

"We must make the United Nations Organization succeed," he declared.

"It presents, to my mind, the only workable solution. To that end the academic members on both sides of the Unarmed Border must join hands and work together as if still at war."

Expressing his anxiety for the control of atomic power, Premier Drew also addressed the gathering on behalf of those who had been awarded honorary degrees. "I do not believe the answer can be found in statutory measures of military control," he asserted. The answer, in his opinion, lay in the field of education.

The six men wore the scarlet LL.D. robes and were presented by Dr. Smith to the Chancellor who conferred the degrees. Hoods signifying their newly-awarded honour were placed over their heads by the Beadle, carrier of the mace of authority during the procession to the dais. Each candidate then signed the Golden Book reserved for such occasions.

As Chancellor Cody uttered the afternoon's final words—Convocatio demissus est—the delegates rose and descended in full majesty from the platform to the organ strains of "The Blue and White."

Formal Dinner in Hart House

That evening in the appropriately international atmosphere of the Great Hall in Hart House, four hundred guests honoured the new President at a formal installation dinner to which candle-lighted tables, blue and white chrysanthemums and royal blue doilies with embossed gold U. of T. crests contributed the Varsity atmosphere. Chancellor Cody again presided.

"I have always looked upon law as the great medium of unity in this country," said His Excellency, Chief Justice Rinfret, speaking at the dinner as a representative of Law. "Law does its best to be based on the truth—and is therefore a bond."

Dr. Cockcroft, of Cambridge University, believed that "we should try to resume the east-west exchange of research students as soon as possible." He had learned to love Canada, he said, and felt strongly that more research workers should come to Canada. His own Cambridge was just emerging from the war period and would soon rebuild its schools of academic research.

Dr. J. S. Thomson brought greetings first as President of the National Conference of Canadian Universities, secondly as President of the University of Saskatchewan and thirdly as "a warm personal friend."

Dr. Thomson acknowledged Toronto's School of Graduate Studies for "the bountiful way it had trained students from all Canadian universities."

Toronto, he said, had "the greatest School of Graduate Studies in the Dominion."

"Universities must do more to shape the future of the country," Dr. F. Cyril James, Principal and Vice Chancellor of McGill University stated. Dr. James saw the job of the President as "to smooth out the road of affairs of the university." He commiserated with President Smith on his burden, but observed that there was "no more fascinating nor more exhilarating duty than to guide a university."

Greetings in French were brought by Dr. Léon Lortie, Professor in the University of Montreal. E. S. Kirkland, President of the Students' Administrative Council, spoke for the undergraduate body of the University of Toronto. "It is difficult to imagine a more difficult time to take over the Presidency of the University," Mr. Kirkland said.

Dr. E. J. Clifford, President of the Alumni Federation of the University, welcomed Dr. Smith on behalf of the vast body of graduates.

A musical programme for the evening was provided by the St. Mary Magdalene Singers with Dr. Henley Willan conducting.

The following day a party of delegates witnessed the McGill-Varsity rugby encounter from a special box in the Varsity Stadium.

President Smith provided an amusing sidelight to the rugby game at half-time. Not the man to allow McGill colours to be flaunted in his face, even when a member of his own Board of Governors is wearing them, was the new President. As cries of "Pull them off!" heralded a gleeful tussle in the presidential box, Dr. Smith tugged the red and white ribbons from the lapel of one of the Governors, a McGill alumnus.

Varsity lost the rugby game, however. "It was left to the rugby team to provide the only disappointment of the week-end," commented Miss A. E. M. Parkes, coordinating secretary of the Installation Committee.

Saturday evening, delegates, University officials, graduates and staff attended the final installation function—a reception at the Royal Ontario Museum. The fifteen hundred guests were received by Dr. and Mrs. Smith in the Armour Room, and later in the evening a buffet supper was served in the Zoology Gallery on the third floor.

Preparations for the President's installation—the first such affair staged by the University since 1907—were initiated in August when the Committee was formed. Invitations were airmailed around the world to a guest list, the basis of which was a list used for the University Centenary in 1927.

Sports — INTERCOLLEGIATE RETURNS

Two Losses—Twenty Starts Puckmen Confident Tonight

By DON COLES

With tonight's Forum meeting between Varsity Blues and their age-old McGill rivals, intercollegiate hockey bids adieu to the 1945-46 season. The year has been a good one for U. of T. puck enthusiasts. Besides playing the full prewar six game schedule, the Blues have also appeared in fourteen exhibition tilts. Only two losses have been recorded against them, one inflicted by Peoples in an early season prep, and soon after more than avenged, the other being that important 5-4 setback at the hands of the rampaging Redmen.

The Blues, then, have moved along at a .900 clip through the winter months, laying prostrate the hapless Queensmen (twice), les pauvres gars de l'Université de Montréal (deux fois), and striking with an equally heavy hand many and various American sextets who aspired to international acclaim.

Michigan Badly Beaten
Of particular interest was the home and home series with the Michigan Wolverines, whose four-fold demise was greeted with satisfaction by sportsmen everywhere. Colorado and New York were other hospitable ports of call on the Blues' itinerary.

The season was relatively free of sidelight attractions. Among the notable exceptions to this rule are included, of course, the neo-inter-national incidents with the Ann Arbor boys, which also produced our only casualties of the campaign—injuries to Bauer, Kryzanowski and Kosick. Aforesaid injuries were of benefit to none save the Tricolor-men of Kingston, who thus escaped with nothing worse than a 6-0 drubbing.

Tonight's The Night

Will McGill take us tonight? Ace Bailey says they can't. Overflowing with confidence, the Ace commented: "Last time we had to fight 11 players and 2 referees. This time we're taking a Toronto official with us. The boys are in tip-top shape. All things even, we're the better team." We mumbled something about the Ides of March, but giving us a blank stare, he went on to express himself as very satisfied with the season's results, "as who wouldn't be?"

Tonight's do-or-die struggle, climaxing the season-long rivalry between these two great teams will settle once and for all the question of intercollegiate supremacy. "May the best team win."

Jr. Blues Showed Great Win Record Throughout Year

By RED MACKAN

The hockey wars of the Varsity Jr. Blues, and more recently the Intermediates, have come to an end.

Nearly 75 men turned out for practice at the first of the year, and when Coach Staff Smythe got to looking the boys over, he soon out the list to fifteen.

These boys carried the Blue colours to the top of the heap in both the Junior "B" and Intermediate competitions.

Staff Smythe produced a powerful front line in Don Barran, Boyd and Smythe. Between them, these youngsters gathered 23 goals and 27 assists for a top rank showing of 50 points in 19 games.

In point getting the second line led the way. Paul Pelow, Doug Davison and Brankston amassed a grand total of 38 goals and 40 assists.

Douglas, "the Battler," Davison was individual scoring champ with 24 goals and 13 assists. This boy is an all-round hockey player, being both a great point-getter, and sensational back-checker.

Not to be outdone was the defensive part of the team. Paul "Huts" Hutzlak was only scored on, an average of three goals a game and on two occasions kept his goal puck-free.

Bud Foran, Irwin, Hartry and Morrison were rear guardsmen for the Blues. These boys had a marvellous season and at times their great work was robbed of due credit because of goal-happy forwards.

Bud Foran was the "bad man" of the bunch having sat out twenty minutes in the cooler.

Four men who were called on to fill in gaps made by injuries, etc., were Ben Hurley, Pierson, Short and Murphy. This foursome put up wonderful efforts when called on, and this can be said with added emphasis in the case of Ben Hurley.

Hats off to coach Staff Smythe and manager Bill MacDonald for producing a swell little team. Your hard work is only seen by the men you coach, but your great record of thirteen wins, three losses and three ties, can be seen by all. Good work, men!

Sr. Rugby Back On Campus Future Looks Good—Stevens

By HENRY WESTCOTT

For six long years the football fans in the University had contented themselves with watching inter-faculty games. Intercollegiate games were banned. But last October 20, intercollegiate spirit returned as the Blues invaded Kingston for the first time since 1939.

With two weeks lopped off the perpetual schedule, the season was more of a prepping for next year, but the boys tossed everything they had into the fray. The short training period, nearly a month shorter than usual, hampered coach Warren Stevens considerably in choosing and training his squad, but the boys showed plenty of class in their few encounters.

Talent Abounds

Plenty of top Varsity talent wandered to Queen's last October. Guys like Al Scott, Rudy Grass, Colin Cranham, Stu Scott, Will Henry, Mel and Gord Lawson, Don Bark, Bill Lawrence, Johnny Farmer, Jack McReynolds, Smith, and sundry others who are no slouches when the football season comes around.

But they lost that first tilt. Two long runs by Jack Parry scuttled the Blues, although the Queen's boys seemed to be outclassed throughout the game. Parry-scattered once for 42 yards and a few minutes later for 92 yards (time: 12:7). And so the Tricolor came up with a 19-15 win.

Varsity Trounces Queen's

The next week the tale was altered considerably however, as the Varsityites tore through the Kingston gentry for a 25-6 victory up at the Blue Bowl. Bob Henry was the happiest man on the field after he gaily romped over the line for two major scores. Jack Parry was out of the Queen's lineup and the visitors seemed completely disorganized without him.

Western virtually clinched the top notch in the standings by beating Toronto in their fixture at London. Big Bill Wardle did the Parry-Henry act there by trotting over the line for two five pointers. The Blues led the Mustangs 10-6 at half time but blew the lead as Western attacked ferociously in the last half to take the game 18-10.

Varsity obviously under-estimated McGill, and lost their last game of the year to the redmen who were occupying the cellar position in the league. As the disturbed fans screamed vituperatives at the players on both teams the Quebecers ran off with the game by a 13-6 count.

The Blues were riddled with casualties throughout the season. Campbell, Woodyatt, Kilpatrick and Armstrong were almost complete-losses to the team due to recurring injuries. Cranham missed the Western game because of 'flu, while Lawson got out of a sick bed to play against McGill. Smith had a pulled tendon, McReynolds had torn side muscles, Lawrence went to the hospital with concussion, Farmer and Henry were hurt in the London battle.

Henry Wins Copp Trophy

It has just been announced that Will Henry has won the Copp trophy. No better choice could have been made. His inside position is often overlooked when the laurels are tossed around. But Will's aggressiveness and sterling defensive play amply earned the honor.

Coach Warren Stevens is looking forward to an excellent team come autumn-time. Many of this year's team will be back. Rumors have it that several stars of Balm-y-Argo-Indian fame may be here.

Mr. Stevens seems confident that "we'll give the other teams a good battle." Time will tell. So till the fall—ripparty, rapperty and 30.

Five Wins No Loss Record For Classy Blue Swimmers

By CRAIG CRINGAN

Winning five out of five meets, Bill Moffat's Varsity swimmers have defeated Queen's, McGill, Western, McMaster, O.A.C., Central "Y" and Hamilton Aquatic Club in meets in the past year.

Starting the season with a resounding splash last October, an inter-faculty series was held with 20 teams competing in 5 divisions. In the finals, U.C. 1sts defeated last year's

To the coach, Bill Moffat, goes most of the credit for the team's success. A winning swimmer himself for the last twelve years, Bill knows all the ropes. Always a staunch supporter of regular training and team spirit, he attended four practises weekly throughout the season.

50-Yd. Keenly Contested

The most keenly contested event in this year's swimming has been the 50 yard free style sprint. From the large number trying out in the 50 Free, four men proved outstanding: Turnbull, winner in the Sr. Intercollegiate Meet; Forsythe, who often beats Turnbull; Granfield, who seems to outswim everybody except his team-mates; and Anderson who flashed to meteoric success, winning every event he entered in the last two meets of the season.

On Dec. 8 at a C.A.S.A. meet in Hamilton Teskey, Moffat, Granfield and Turnbull swam the 200 yard sprint relay in 1:41.1, beating the intercollegiate record of 1:42.2. On March 9, Granfield, Forsythe, Turnbull and Anderson swam the same event in 1:41.0 in a meet against Central Y. Bill Moffat is confident that the team would have broken the record officially in the meet at Queen's had they not been tired from swimming about two previous races each.

Marshall Sets Record

Two neat breast stroke swimmers on the team are Mike Beer and Les Curry. Both are sure point-winners although Al Marshall leaves them far behind. Marshall chopped 1.3 seconds off the Intercollegiate record of 2:36.6 for the 200 yards

Basketball Season Varied; High Hopes For Next Year

By BOB MORRISON

After dropping the final game of the intercollegiate basketball schedule to the Western Mustangs, the Varsity senior basketball squad packed away their jeans for another year—thus completing a season with both happy moments and heartbreaks.

The Blues, under the expert direction of Roy Dilworth, showed great promise with several early season's wins over some of the top local teams. And even though theirs was not the winner's lot when the curtain had dropped on the intercollegiate play, they, nevertheless, displayed an excess of good basketball and team spirit which carried them on a high tide through the early part of the season and which reached its height when they downed the number one ranking senior Canadian basketball team—the Assumption College crew.

Western Nemeses

They followed this up with victories over the prominent Wayne Tartars and the Albion Britons. But as is always the case the tide ebbed and they met defeat twice at the hands of the Western Mustangs—the same Mustangs that the Blues defeated in their first "big" home game of the season at Maple Leaf Gardens in early January.

Balancing the ledger it can be seen that the Dilworth-men recorded enough wins to put them in the black ink—chalking up 11 victories and dropping 7—with 1 tie. They had a point total of 993 as against their opposition's 859. And of those 993 points Harry Mayzell accounted for 195—about one-fifth of the local's total. Second in line for scoring honors was sharp-shooting Murray Thomson.

Wayne Finally Conquered

High point in this year's campaign was success achieved against the Wayne University Tartars—a team that we could not touch in former years. This triumph came on our home floor and more than compensated for an early-season loss against the same team. Against this must be weighed a heart-breaking defeat from the Redmen from Montreal which threw the Blues into the precarious position of having to brand the Mustangs twice in order to capture the yeagats with cream.

Looking to the future—we see that, of the big ten who carried the mail for Toronto this winter, Doug Spry, Stu Scott, Don Gibson, and Whitley Clayton won't be around come the 46-47 term. If all goes well the other six—Zeaton, Cranham, Thomson, Wallace, Mayzell and Fountain will be bouncing back in the fall—along with Syd Himel who started and finished the season with the Blues.

Mastermind Dilworth

Responsible for a large share of the team's success was the work of the conscientious mastermind—Roy Dilworth. He introduced to the local fans the floating-zone defense—which proved highly effective in combatting thrusts against the Blue end of the Hart House alley-way.

No one can say that the Blues haven't offered the utmost in the way of fine basketball and exciting entertainment at all times and next year's crew will have a high goal if they expect to give the same.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Don Mason and Bredin Stapells
RECONVERSION IN SPORTS

1946 has been the great peace year after six long years of war. 1946 has also been a great year in sports at Varsity. The intercollegiate program has returned in all its vigour and excitement. An entire season has now been completed in which your many Varsity teams have brought numerous honours to your Alma Mater in the varied fields of athletic endeavour. These two pages before you speak for themselves, and we need not labour the point.

AJAX DEBUT
The brothers of the Skule men at Ajax have embarked on a very ambitious sports program which up to date has been exceedingly enterprising under the leadership of "Buff" Horton, their Athletic Director. And this has been accomplished in spite of the lack of equipment. Next fall we hope to see athletes from the country swarming in to contribute to intercollegiate competition.

EVERY MAN AN ATHLETE
The intramural program of this University is the largest and most complete of any on the continent, as we have said before. With the returning of the veterans, and the consequent swelling of the student body, many of the authorities were worried about the success of this part of the curriculum. The result have been more than gratifying as more than 4,200 students were accommodated by our facilities. Great credit must go to the entire athletic staff, who carry on a great work unnoticed by the majority of the student body.

STAFF ET AL
And so until next fall, when some strong and enterprising souls will carry on, we say simply—thirty.

INTERCOLLEGIATE
Varsity's colors headed the bright array of colleges gathered in Hart House for the swimming meet. Students can be justly proud of the substantial majority of their lead . . . mark of prowess, distinction, even above victory over opponents.

In Kingston, four representatives from Toronto acquitted themselves with less honor, placing second . . . in the battle for the birdie, called badminton.

Basgnetball also assumed a secondary position, this time the Blues making place for their hostesses of McGill ahead of them. We are not inferring that Varsity allowed McGill to wear the laurels merely out of deference to the hospitality tendered to them . . . but we do wish to suggest that the referees of an intercollegiate meet be chosen from at least two of the colleges represented.

The ski club entered into intercollegiate activities of a sort . . . under the patronage of the Toronto club. Varsity skiers competed with Ottawa and Montreal, with the ribbons and sliding in the direction of Ottawa. Four skiers journeyed to North Bay to show their stuff, coming south with several blue ribbons in their pockets.

INTERFACULTY
P.H.E. gathered together a goodly number of prizes and trophies this year . . . baseball, basketball, tennis, in fact, they now occupy the position held by St. Hilda's '44-'45, placing P.H.E. at the head of other faculties in the field of women's sports.

Clubs were swamped with a deluge of volunteers this semester . . . which flood of enthusiasm found them unprepared, in facilities and administration. Thus many competent sportswomen were turned away, who might have added much to the general "good". Let us hope the executives who follow will prepare for this enlarged interest and participation.

Speaking of facilities, the fact was unearthed that there existed a trust fund for the express purpose of erecting a woman's Hart House . . . further, that these funds will not necessarily be used for said purpose. It is our firm belief that if enough noise is made by the campus co-eds that the Directors will see fit to provide a safe, concrete and ample-sized building wherein women may carry on sports activities without inconvenience.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC NOMINATIONS

ATHLETIC DIRECTORATE:
Nominations for election to the Women's Athletic Directorate for 1946-47 have been received as follows:

Margaret Fletcher, Trin. III
Betty Fullerton, Vic. III

Rowing:—Catharine Forbes, U.C. II. (aecl.)
Skiing:—Helen Proudfoot, U.C. II.; Barbara Beatty, U.C. II.; Judy Rowe, Trin. III.

Elections will be held for the Swimming, Tennis, Volleyball and Ski Club Presidents on Tuesday, March 19, at 4.30 p.m. in the Household Science Lecture Room.

Intramural Athletics Have Great Year 4200 Students Active in Vast Program

UC Probable Reed Trophy Winners

By BOB JONES and BRIAN HAND
The task of maintaining an Intramural Sports Programme for 1945-'46 was heightened by the return of Intercollegiate competition, and by the increased enrolment. All possible facilities were kept going one-hundred percent. There were approximately 4,200 students registered in Intramural activities, 2,600 of whom were participants in team sports and 1,400 in tournaments and meets.

The cherished Reed Trophy award for participation and accomplishment in intramural activities has been virtually clinched this year by U.C. The standings as of March 10 show the Red and White to be in front by more than 1,000 points and only a surprise upset could vault second place Trinity to the top. At present Forestry holds down third spot.

School Cops Mulock Cup
A review of the Intramural championships of '45-'46 shows them fairly well divided between U.C. and S.P.S. During the fall term, scheduled and playoff games took place in Rugby, Soccer, Lacrosse and Volleyball.

Sr. S.P.S. won the Mulock Cup for Rugby from the defending champs U.C. in a season that saw the Schoolmen take six games without a loss. Vic. topped the first of their intramural championships in the form of the Arts Faculty Cup for Soccer.

Meanwhile within the walls of Hart House, P. & H.E. vanquished all opposition in the Lacrosse playoffs while Jr. U.C. helped their Reed Trophy drive by taking the Victoria Staff Cup in Volleyball.

Tennis and Golf Popular
Tennis and Golf were popular in the fall term, tennis having a record 176 entries. The tennis championships were divided among U.C., P. & H.E. and Trinity. U.C. won the Victoria Tennis Cup for team competition; McFarland of P. & H.E. was singles champ; Lau (last year's singles champ) and Bell-Irving of Trinity were the doubles champions.

Golf was strictly a School affair with the team honours going to S.P.S. for the second consecutive year and the individual championship being a tie between R. Spence and Gord. Ball, both of S.P.S.

Hec. Phillips again rated as coach of the year by having 300 students turn out in an average of five events over a period of eleven weeks for Track and Field. S.P.S. took honours in Senior Track and the Track Relays; U.C. made their contribution in the Jr. Track; Vic. ran away with three awards in the form of the Jr. and Sr. Harriers and the Indoor Track. In direct contrast to last year, Meds. were conspicuous by their absence in Track championships. Art Jackes set an Interfaculty record in the high jump with his 5'10 1/2" leap.

Intramural swimmers had an active year, U.C. taking top billing in Sr. and Jr. Swimming. Al Marshall of U.C. set a new record for both the Interfaculty and Intercollegiate 200 yd. breast-stroke in 2:33 5/8. The Swim League also went to the Royal College. The Ehardt Cup for Water Polo was captured by U.C. Firsts.

The Sr. and Jr. Boxing and Sr. Wrestling all went to U.C., S.P.S. won first place in Jr. Wrestling. Keith Conn of S.P.S. was the individual Fencing champ and S.P.S. also took the Sr. Fencing competitions. P. & H.E. placed first in gymnastics and Laxton of P. & H.E. was the intercollegiate gym champ.

Basketball had the largest team entry of the year: 94 teams composed of 900 men. This was due to the introduction of Minor Basketball to replace Basgball.

Major Basketball, just completed this week, found S.P.S. gathering more laurels by winning the Sifton Cup in two straight games. Eng., Bus. and P. & H.E. teams with one win each are fighting it out for Minor League honours.

The Gold and Blue fought their way to their second championship of this week by taking Vic. I two straight in the Jennings Cup hockey playoffs. (It was sweet revenge for S.P.S. who had trailed their opponents in the league standing.)

Squash and skiing appeared after a wartime absence; the former after a scarcity of racquets and balls and the latter after resumption of transportation. The S.P.S. skiing team and Hansen won championships for School. The Squash championships, completed just this week found Vic on top in the team standings and Moses of that faculty the top individual player.

This large-scale program will be running top speed again next year, and will continue to contribute to the building of intercollegiate athletes as it has in the past. A great deal of credit goes to "Mac" MacCutcheon, and to the cohorts of referees, time-keepers, team managers, and coaches nearly all students—who form the backbone of the inter-faculty agenda.

ALL STAR TEAM

By JACK FINE
The all-star teams are presented in this column. Choices were made on the basis of nominations by the various managers. For any men that may have been left it is probably due to the fact that many managers were unable to send in their nominations.

S.P.S. in particular did very well in their representation this year. Actually they deserved this distinction as they produced a grand group of athletes, and incidentally several league winning teams to boot.

Special mention should go to Business Administration who formed such a strong hockey club out of a very small group of men. Also Trinity and Victoria are to be commended for their fine showing.

ATHLETIC DIRECTORATE ELECTIONS

MARCH 25TH.

The Electoral Meeting of the University of Toronto Athletic Association to elect representatives to the Directorate for 1946-47, will be held on Monday, March 25th, at 4 P.M. SHARP, in the Debates Room, Hart House (south side, upstairs).

Under the Constitution of the Athletic Association (Article IX. section 4) all Athletic Club Executives are entitled to send representatives to this meeting. These representatives must be male undergraduates of the University of Toronto or one of the affiliated colleges, who are proceeding to a degree, are in actual attendance upon lectures, and who have paid the annual fee required (Bylaw D). The Club Executives, now being formed, are being notified to meet at an early date, appoint their representatives and give them their credentials for the electoral meeting. On presentation of these credentials at the Athletic Office on the morning of March 25th, representatives will be given voting tickets.

A student to be elected to the Directorate must, at the time of his nomination, be in the second or higher year of his course at the University, but not in his final year. The nominations must be in writing on the form provided for the purpose, signed by two male undergraduate members of the Athletic Association in good standing, and filed with the Secretary of the Association not later than 5 p.m. Thursday, March 21st. The nomination forms may be obtained at the Athletic Office.

President Smith: "LET KNOWLEDGE TO WISDOM GROW"

Winding up The Varsity's series on education and giving in some measure an authentic preview of future University policy is the installation address of President Sidney Smith, made available to readers of The Varsity through the kind permission of the author and of the University of Toronto Press, who published it recently in booklet form.

ON the walls of my room in Simcoe Hall, the portraits of seven men, who have held since 1827 the office of President of King's College or of the University of Toronto, mark chapters of the story of the founding and growth of this institution. I stand here today as a successor in that noble line—Strachan, McCaul, Wilson, London, Hutton, Falconer and Cody. I would indeed be insensible if I felt other than humble when I gaze on that gallery.

I am not unfair to any of my predecessors when I declare that they did not build the University of Toronto. The success that attended their efforts was mainly due to devoted, inspired and inspiring colleagues of the teaching staff. For a university president, there are many duties. I believe that a duty, second to none, is to recommend to the governing authorities for appointments or promotions not merely good but rather first-class men and women. Those of us who have been charged with that duty have sometimes been content with the good appointee. Poor appointments are rare. Good appointments are not good enough. Indeed they have been a blight on many universities. A knowledge of the University of Toronto, past and present, affords many examples of outstanding scholars on the staff who have enhanced the prestige of the institution out of all proportion to their number. In his search for first-class members of the staff, a president should seek systematically the advice of able and wise colleagues whose interest in the institution is never any whit less than his. Any university should be regarded as a community of scholars eager to learn, to search and to teach. The president must strive constantly to facilitate the achievement by the community of its objectives while he never forgets that the administrative organization is established for the community and not the community for the administration.

All true universities are heirs of the bountiful traditions of the free mind and the free spirit which were gained and squired by the toll and the strife of resolute teachers, our heroic academic ancestors. That common heritage does not pre-empt that universities should be identical in form or in the details of function. The University of Toronto had its own peculiar genius and it has its own particular genius. It would be wrong for any person to endeavour to have the institution conform to the pattern of any other university at home or abroad. While it shares a common heritage, the University of Toronto has its roots in Canadian soil and it should continue to express the highest aspirations of Canadians and of Canada. It has become an institution for the whole of Canada. I do not make that statement out of any institutional conceit; I express it out of knowledge of the Maritime Provinces and of Western Canada. I trust that no spirit of parochialism or provincialism will ever obscure that feature of its genius. This institution, however, can never excel at the expense of any other Canadian university. As those other institutions progress, the service and prestige of the University of Toronto will be correspondingly enhanced. Properly, we hear much about Canadian unity. It is easy to envisage the University of Toronto playing an even more outstanding part than it does at present in promoting that unity as it brings together on its campus, particularly at the graduate level, teachers and taught from all sections of Canada and then sends them forth imbued with a deeper resolution to solve the problems of Canadian federalism.

Another characteristic of the University of Toronto is its federated structure in which state-supported and church-supported colleges and faculties co-operate for the advancement of higher education. Out of some experience in another federated university, I have a confidence in this type of organization. It is an axiom of political theory that federations are not easy to govern. Yet, the very anxieties of administering them make for wise policies under which the rich diversities of the parts may be reconciled with the welfare of the whole.

A federated university, composed of indigenous institutions each with its own tradition and outlook, should be characterized for its catholicity as scholars in it seek truth from diverse vantage points.

As Kahlil Gibran has written: "Say not, 'I have found the truth' but, rather, 'I have found a truth'." Through its component parts, the University of Toronto may still develop the individual student with his peculiar talents and ambitions. Thus it may promote the education of the many types needed in a democracy—as opposed to the education of a single conforming type for a totalitarian state—provided that its doors are always open for, and its courses are always available to, able and talented students, irrespective of their social status or economic circumstances.

As a beneficiary of a universal heritage, the University of Toronto is more than a local or national institution. It is, also, a member of the republic of the mind—that republic which has no tariffs, quotas, or embargoes on the exchange of ideas and ideals throughout the world. The presence here today of so many representatives of so many universities in other lands testifies to the existence and persistence of that republic. It is fitting that we should pause and render thanks for the courage of sister universities in Europe which, against dangers that might have daunted us, kept burning the fires on the altars of learning. Their dire plight should ever be a warning that the dictator who would impose on his country and on the world a blackout of beauty, truth and goodness endeavours first to padlock universities. That warning is at the same time the measure of the high calling of universities to assist in building a world of decency and order. The dictator, big or small, national, provincial or institutional, must always be the sworn enemy of all universities.

run on the content and purpose of university education and I hesitate to add to the miscellany of opinions. At this juncture in world affairs, there is for me one stark question for universities: What are they doing to secure the peace bought at such a cruel price? Will the universities avail themselves of the chance to save the republic of the mind and to save our very civilizations. That declaration today carries the implication that there was nothing in issue in the war against Germany, Italy and Japan except deciding which nations would dictate the terms of the armistice and the peace treaty. Such a view is a betrayal of those who died in order that we, who survive, may translate into reality their ideals of honour and justice. With the clash of arms, of the past thirty years, there has been a conflict of philosophies or a battle of ideas in which our enemies opposed our concept of the free mind and the free spirit and our regard for the worth and dignity of the individual with the doctrine that the individual is of little or of no account except in so far as he becomes a cog in a state machine controlled by an irresponsible dictator.

Notwithstanding that the military victory has been decisively won, the battle of ideas still rages within and among nations. Its battle ground is the hearts and minds of youth. In that battle, universities have a special stake. Will they train a corps d'élite for it? In anticipation of my main theme, I can now answer that question in the negative if we of the universities are to be mainly concerned with the training of men and women for vocations and professions.

Universities can assist immeasurably in putting the inventions and discoveries of the twentieth century to use for good and not for evil purposes. The latest and the most alarming discovery, the means of unleashing the power of the atom, has the portent of utter tragedy or high hope. We honour at this Convocation two distinguished scientists, Dr. Conant and Dr. Cockcroft, who are leaders of the search into the mysteries of nature. They and their associates pray with the rest of us that their discovery will be used for the benefit of man and not for his destruction. They and their fellow workers are more eager than ever to place at the service of a battered humanity their talents. But the physical scientists need the support of peoples everywhere.

The threat of utter tragedy does not arise directly out of man's greater mastery over nature; it comes, as Sir James Jeans has so pointedly stated, from the absence of man's moral control over himself. That control can be accomplished only through, and by, education. By the word "education" in this context, I do not mean merely increased expertness. It has to do with man's moral, as well as his intellectual, development. The end of learning is not knowledge but virtue. "Where shall wisdom be found and where is the place of understanding?" is ever a searching entreaty. There are those who say that the universities should develop the intellects of their students. Of course, that statement is true but it is not the whole truth. While we despise Hitler's exhortation to German youth, "Think with your blood", we must bear in mind that it is a proper part of any educational process to help the student to harness his emotions. If by any weird whim of fate we were faced with choosing either first-class brains and second-class characters, or second-class brains and first-class characters, surely there could be no doubt about our selection. A weak character not only unfits a man for living in a free society but it also warps the thinking of the most brilliant intellect. I must add that I would be one of the first to oppose strenuously the replacing of tough intellectual effort by evangelistic fervour.

Intellectualism, however, may become so sterile that it no longer produces builders but rather destructive critics. Ideals, ideas and facts are equally the business of universities. In the cauldron of war, all of us—and perhaps to the greatest extent the men and women of the Armed Forces—have apprehended more clearly ideals which cannot be demonstrated in the laboratory of the physical scientist or verified by rational processes.

There are ideals, imperatives, abiding values or absolutes—choose your own philosophic designation—which are not relative to time or place. The physical scientist who deals with things puts forward, with an integrity that demands admiration, hypotheses which he has proven subject always to a stipulation that their validity depends on the constant presence of certain factors. In a naturalistic mood, we have carried over into our study of man's relations with his fellow men and with his God, into our public policies and into our designs for securing the peace this attitude of relativity.

Can we not in our study of man's intellectual achievements, of his aesthetic experience, of his moral yearnings and of his religious convictions settle upon and hold fast to certain abiding principles? We in universities have rightly prided ourselves for the attitude of the open mind, although on occasion we may have wondered if we have not helped to develop minds so open that ideas could blow into, through and out of them with an astonishing celerity. Is it academic heresy to advocate that students—when they have discovered for themselves, and not accepted from some chancellor, ideals and beliefs, principles and duties—should in deep conviction close their minds in respect of those imperatives? I vouch to warrant a paragraph from a recent significant study of educational problems. Entitled "General Education in a Free Society", it was prepared in Harvard University by a Presidential Committee. The paragraph is:

"How far should we go in the direction of the open mind? Especially after the first World War, liberals were sometimes too distrustful of enthusiasm and were inclined to abstain from committing themselves as though there were something foolish, even shameful, in belief. Yet especially with youth, which is ardent and enthusiastic, open mindedness without belief is apt to lead to the opposite extreme of fanaticism. We can all perhaps recall young people of our acquaintance who from a position of extreme skepticism, and indeed because of that position, fell an easy prey to fanatical gospels. It seems that nature abhors an intellectual vacuum. A measure of belief is necessary in order to preserve the quality of the open mind. If toleration is not to become nihilism, if conviction is not to become dogmatism, if criticism is not to become cynicism, each must have something of the other."

Where in universities may there be promoted best an equilibrium between open mindedness and conviction in economic, social, political and moral spheres? Where in universities may we best find the opportunity to answer—to invoke the trenchant words of John Morley—"the questions that haunt all ages, that survive all philosophies, that defy continuous generations of chartered soothsayers, that mock rising and sinking schools alike?" As one who has spent most of his academic career in a professional field, I answer without hesitation, "In Arts faculties". There is no gainsaying the statement that the primary objective of any professional faculty is to assist the student in acquiring proficiency in some occupation, although there are, in professional schools, many gifted teachers who accept readily and discharge admirably the duty of acquainting their students with "the questions that haunt all ages."

If I were requested to indicate the most significant trend of the present in Canadian universities, I would say that it is to be found in the endeavours of medical, dental, engineering and law schools to provide for their students something more than a competence in their respective arts. Those commendable efforts will help the medical or dental student to relate his practice to the welfare of the body politic, the engineering student to adapt his functions for the betterment of human relations and the law student to regard his work for clients as promoting the sway of justice.

Speaking generally, I am unable to discern in the Canadian scene a comparable ferment in the departments of the humanities and the social sciences of faculties of Arts. May it be suggested that an adoption by some of those departments of the so-called scientific method of the physicist, the chemist or the biologist, who work with pointer readings on a mathematically graduated dial or scale, has obscured the humanity of the humanities and discounted the social aspects of the social sciences? The human and social aspects of our civilization cannot be computed in millograms or killograms.

Henry Hallam wrote in the nineteenth century in his Literature of Europe: "One danger of this rather favourite application of mathematical principles to moral probabilities . . . is, that, by considering mankind merely as units, it practically habituates the mind to a moral and social levelling, as inconsistent with a just estimate of men as it is characteristic of the present age." What would he say today? I would inquire further: Are not the Arts faculties in Canadian universities, in some instances, concerned with professional or quasi-professional objectives to the detriment of their major mission of developing students who will be defenders of human freedom, examples of human dignity and apostles of human values?

I mention another problem in the field of the liberal arts. In some, if not in all our universities, it is possible for students to take courses leading to a degree in Arts without having had even a nodding acquaintance with fields of study necessary for an understanding of the culture of which they are the heirs. That understanding is essential for a compelling sense of the duty to sustain and extend the best in that heritage.

While avoiding superficiality, can we design courses that will not have lamentable lacunae for the eager and able student? The divisions and the sub-divisions in every field of study have been so multiple that it may seem impossible for any student to get even a general picture of the world in which he lives or to apprehend the issues inherent in the survival of our civilization. Should we succumb to that counsel of despair? There should be a connectedness in all university work and, particularly, in the study of the liberal arts but the nexus has been often strained by the administrative and academic organization of university departments each of which, by reason of the splendid calibre of many of its members, has tended to become an imperium in imperio in the sphere of knowledge and wisdom which requires unity of vision and of purpose.

Are we satisfied that our specialization encourages that cross-fertilization so essential for a liberal education? How can we ensure that specializa-

Music

Once again, Toronto has had an active musical season. The symphony orchestra has given many more concerts than in previous years. The series concerts at Eaton Auditorium have been extended to include an extra recital each week. A new group, The Friends of Great Music, has brought outstanding performers of chamber music to the city, and a series of lectures by noted musicologists has been inaugurated at the Conservatory. The year has been marked by increased musical activity on the campus.

These are all healthy signs. There has been more music for both the connoisseur and the novice. There has been more music both imported and local. The contrast between these two, however, is still sharp. While this is to be expected, one might hope to see the difference in levels reduced year by year. Some progress has been made toward this end but not enough to warrant a denial of Sir Thomas Beecham's allegation that Toronto is musically provincial.

In large measure, this is due to the peculiar brand of professional criticism which still flourishes downtown. Toronto music critics constitute a major obstacle toward musical progress. They do nothing to foster it and indeed, appear little interested in it. Competent criticism is an imperative prerequisite for Toronto's musical growth.

Art

It looks as if the fine arts are in for some fat years, now that the practical exigencies of war are over. At least developments of the past year would seem to indicate that as far as the graphic arts are concerned.

The most noteworthy development on the local art scene, to my way of thinking, has been the increased interest in art taken by amateurs. Perhaps it looks forward to Tolstoy's ideal state of affairs, in which art is entirely a matter of amateur effort, preached and practised as a soul-refreshing relief from the grind of an increasingly mechanized existence. Certainly there are apparently many more people with an interest in art now than there seem ever to have been before—and I don't think it's just because I meet more of them. Amateur shows on the campus are flourishing; sketch classes are crowded; Fine Art courses are expanding rapidly.

Professional art seems to have felt a quickening breath as well—more in appreciation and interest, than in production, I think. To cite but one instance—it would, I understand, have been unthinkable ten years ago that Eaton's College Street should show the kind of modern work we have seen there this past season—Helena Rubenstein, the younger Canadian artists, and suchlike. "Safe" stuff they still have, but in less abundance and ubiquity.

The study and appreciation of the Fine Arts in this country is new. Not until 1936 was a Fine Art chair inaugurated in this university, and you still have to go South to get a Doctorate in it. But the signs of the times are promising, I feel. The Fine Arts in Canada appear to be set for a period of growth.

Books

This is the Varsity's retrospective issue and it has been suggested that I should write a summary of the year's book reviews, something I am not entirely willing to do. We have had too few books for any sensible generalizations about prevailing literary tendencies. And at the best a summary of reviews can only prove distressing for the reviewer and downright boring for most readers. I intend therefore to comment briefly on the critical attitude I have attempted to define in these reviews. (Other reviewers appearing in this column have of course had complete freedom to express contrary opinions.)

Every effort has been made to render my critical beliefs quite specific. There have been a number of general columns—the first one last fall, such later ones as Ethics of the Slick, For the Young Writers, Thematic Problems, and so forth. The primary and immediate literary problem is to find a way for serious literature to obtain an influence comparable to that of the best-sellers, without, however, lowering its standards. In my opinion the solution is not for the young writer to seek retreat in some rarefied and esoteric sanctuary; nor is it to dedicate one's writing to some overall political, economic or sociological theory, with no further regard for fundamental literary attributes. Presumably the solution lies midway. This is the opinion of at least some critics; it is also my own.

Answering the questionnaire earlier this year, some readers asked for reviews of more popular books. If I could choose the books, I would certainly make some changes; but the books I want are those written by able and intelligent writers. Publishers' advertisements and most reviewers on the metropolitan dailies give the best-sellers more than sufficient prominence. This is the general policy which will be pursued next year if I am associated with this column.

Reviews

TOIKE OIKE

I have just finished reading the galley proofs of the literary issue of Toike Oike, which should be distributed about the time you read this review. In comparison with earlier issues, this year's magazine is a good deal longer and is conceived on a much more ambitious scale. It is a credit to the engineers.

Beginning with the brief editorial and reappearing in many of the contributions is a heartening tendency to examine the immediate problems facing our society, with specific reference to the engineering student. I was somewhat surprised to discover, on compiling a rough list of the articles under the headings of General and Purely Scientific, that there is a quite definite balance in favour of the former classification. Perhaps it would also be wise to emphasize immediately that most of the writing is technically satisfactory. Particularly in the more complete scientific articles, a simple direct style has been adopted; but this is not a suggestion that there are any noticeable attempts at outright popularization.

Toike Oike is almost always interesting, usually intelligent, if sometimes debatable, and frequently amusing. And that is about all a university magazine should be.

THE UNDERGRAD

Also submitted in page-proof form for review is the U.C. Undergrad, which after some years experimenting with a seldom-satisfactory miniature yearbook format, has gone back definitely to its former purely literary status.

The pure literature is of generally high quality; justifying, as undergraduate writing does not often justify, the publication of the magazine for the sake of its contents rather than as a spur to college spirit.

The editors have austere classified their material as Prose, Art, and Poetry, and given over a section of their 72 pages to each. This lumping of contents has the advantage of displaying the poetry fairly rather than as filler, and the defect of surfeiting the reader's interest before he has progressed very far through the book.

Of the content proper we have only room to say that the art is excellent, the verse intelligible, the prose competent and generally interesting, and the pervading tone gloomy. The almost total representation of the Modern Letters Club in the contributors' list is a guarantee of intelligence and quality, but not of life. Art for Art's Sake is a dangerous doctrine, especially for undergraduates.

Drama

There were two plays presented in Toronto during the past academic session that could honestly be said to be worth the price of admission. These were the productions in Hart House of Wilder's plays, Our Town and Skin of our Teeth.

The Royal Alec alternated slight comedy and melodrama all season. Of the former, The Hasty Heart and Life with Father were extremely well acted and were amusing enough in an insignificant sort of way. Of the latter, the 'race' plays Strange Fruit and Deep are the Roots, were (relatively speaking) most convincing. The best acted melodrama of the year was the Negro version of Night must Fall which was presented in Eaton Auditorium.

Larceny Inc (a cheap farce) was the only full-length amateur show that was competently produced, though The Village Players have done good work with shorter and more serious pieces. Somewhere or other we must mention Trinity's production of Chicken Every Sunday which indicated that that college had far too much talent to be fooling with farce. And we must record the revival of the U of T Drama Festival, which was an event of some diplomatic importance.

The Shakesperian Society presented two flops. A 'Civic' Theatre another two. The Victoria Playhouse was turned into a movie-theatre. And that's about all.

Hart House Theatre may foster a more extensive program next year. Unless it does the drama-shortage will continue.

Prize For Play

A prize of $50 for the best one-act play written by an undergraduate of University College has been instituted by Mrs. J. H. Godfrey in memory of her son Pilot Officer Robin Godfrey, R.C.A.F. who was killed on active service in 1942.

Known as the Robin Godfrey Prize, the first award will be made next fall by a committee of three to be nominated by the Principal of University College and the Head of the Department of English.

For the first award entries will be accepted up to Nov. 15, although normally they will only be accepted until March 30. All students now enrolled in U.C. are eligible to compete.

Two typed copies of the play bearing a motto or a pseudonym and a separate envelope containing the motto or pseudonym must be submitted to the Registrar of U.C.

The awarding of the prize is at the discretion of the committee.

THE NEW AGE OF POWER by Stanley McConnell (50 cts.), is a small book with a big idea. Thesis is that our economic ills arise from the fact that capital compounds, raising all prices, multiplying debt, creating the paradox of poverty and plenty. In this book a thesis is advanced by which compounding will be eliminated, prices fall in accordance with productive capacity, opening the door to a new age of plenty. This theory is more fully developed in Mr. McConnell's newer book "I Speak for the Centre." (2.00).

The Stewards Reply

(The following statement was approved by the Board of Stewards of Hart House for publication in the Varsity. It is hoped that it will assist in clarifying the issue regarding the use of Hart House by women.)

From time to time there arises a demand for the use of Hart House by women undergraduates and it seems necessary once in every student generation of four or five years to state the intention of the Founders.

Hart House was formally handed over to the University of Toronto by the trustees of the Massey Foundation on the 11th November, 1919, and the Governors of the University in accepting this magnificent gift undertook definite obligations one of which was that the use of Hart House should be confined to male undergraduates. In the opinion of the trustees, Hart House could not serve the purpose for which it was erected unless it was operated as a men's institution. That is still the opinion of the trustees, and, though some may disagree with it, the fact remains that Hart House was accepted by the Governors of the University on this understanding, and any divergence from this basic principle would be a betrayal of trust as well as being legally indefensible.

The present demand, however, is not for any basic change in the main terms of the Deed of Gift, but for the admission of women students when the clubs of which they are members hold meetings in Hart House. There are perhaps 100 clubs connected with the various faculties, colleges and schools in the University at the present time. A considerable proportion of these include women in their membership.

Clearly there could be no discrimination between these clubs. If one club were allowed to introduce women, others must be given similar concessions. To make the percentage of women members in a particular club a condition of its admission to Hart House would be an impossible regulation to administer. It would be difficult to convince the club with a 30% woman membership that it had no right to meet in Hart House when a club with 25% or 20% or 5% of women was allowed that privilege.

Moreover, if women were able to attend club meetings it would not be long before there was a demand for the right to attend other functions in Hart House, such as Friday recitals, library evenings, art classes, art exhibitions, midday recitals, debates and other such activities. Indeed, some years ago there was an agitation for this very thing. At present the main occasions when women are admitted as guests to Hart House are dances, Sunday evening concerts, and visitors' days.

Within the last few years a ruling has been made by the Board of Stewards whereby women can, if desired, attend the official annual dinner of the college or faculty of which they are undergraduate members. These are treated as special occasions and are considered to be within the terms of the Trust. The theatre, which is a separate unit, has always been available for the use of men and women students.

Hart House is an integral part of the University of Toronto, which is co-educational as regards its academic courses, and clearly under these circumstances it is no easy task to administer the building in the spirit of the Deed of Gift. The Board of Stewards and its Committees have done their best during the last 27 years to interpret the Deed in accordance with the views of the Founders, and they see no reason to make any radical change in the policy which they heretofore followed.

calaustrate": it is not synonymous with "graduate".

Graduate schools should not be preoccupied with occupational objectives, not even the laudable purpose of training men and women for places on university staffs. The graduate field should be primarily one of seeking and finding for both students and teachers. There, the very hormones of universities may be secreted. There, teachers, if they are to do more in a university than flail old academic straw, should find the opportunity to explore for themselves and thereby advance the frontiers of knowledge and also engender in all their students the zest of the adventurer. In Canadian universities, there is an urgent need for a resounding statement to the effect that research and allied activities and the directing of students in graduate schools should be something more than appendages to an overcrowded teaching. Implicit in that declaration, there would be the fact that teaching and research are truly complementary.

In raising specific questions, I have not departed from my theme with respect to the role of universities in the battle of ideas. It may be that my observations about particular problems have thrown some light on the general task.

If your accolade, Mr. Chancellor, merely betokens the proficiency of a graduate for a vocation or profession, this institution will fail. In the figurative statement that, "the purpose of education is not to prepare children for their occupations

 tion flows out of the general and then returns to and enriches it, and streams forth, in turn, to other specific fields? How can we attain a greater coherency without sacrificing the benefits of departmentalism? In any event, we should not contemplate with ready favour further organizational divisions and sub-divisions of the seamless web of education. We should not concede without extreme caution the pressing claims of those who would place at the undergraduate level new professional or quasi-professional courses. If such offerings merit recognition by universities, they should be placed in the post-baccalaureate field. I emphasize the word "post-bac-but to prepare them against their occupations", there is much truth for universities in their work with youth. Every degree of this University, in addition to any occupational certification, should signify that its holder has qualifications to study and to help in solving the vital problems of our civilization. It should be the hall-mark of a man or woman who will not be overcome by the "here and now" and who, in thinking, sub specie aeternitatis, will throw off the shackles of life's urgencies and walk calmly but resolutely amidst the folly and the frenzy of the moment.

May my colleagues and I be delivered from the evil of regarding syllabi and curricula as ends in themselves. That petition will be granted if, as co-workers in the republic of the mind, we perceive anew the spiritual forces of liberal education within this University—forces that transcend the totality of the individuals who founded and who have helped to build it. The University of Toronto "partly is, and wholly hopes to be". That must always be true of it. If it should ever appear to reach perfection, it would cease to be a university. It would then be only an agency of indoctrination. In this University which should be in form and in essence a community of scholars, Let knowledge grow from more to more

 But more of reverence in us dwell
 That mind and soul, according well,
 May make one music as before,
 But vaster.

All Firemen On Alert For Liquid Air Lecture

By M. J. McAuliffe

To-morrow night Professor John Satterly will visit Ajax at 7.00 p.m. to amaze all with the magic power that liquid air possesses. This will be the same display that has amazed students from all over the world for the last decade.

All the intricate details for this dangerous experiment have been arranged. Fire Chief Winters has cancelled all leave and has assured the Director that all available equipment and manpower will be on duty Wednesday night in the Recreation Hall. Both Dr. McKenzie and Dr. McLean will be on call the complete evening, and all students are warned not to become ill until after the professor has departed. This has been made necessary due to the fact that over four hundred Arts students were nearly killed at the last lecture. For this Prof. Satterly received the highest award that the Engineering Society can bestow, the much treasured Order of the Test Tube and Electron.

As the number of tickets is limited, everyone is advised to procure one from the general office in Hart House at their earliest opportunity. Any of those who are unable to obtain a ticket, will be permitted to take their life into their own hands and enter Hall at 6.55 p.m. Conversely, by Newton's fourth law, ticket holders forfeit their rights at the same hour.

734 Elections

Residence 734 elected a new House Committee on Thursday evening as the previous committee had resigned (?). Mr. Perry, Superintendent of residences, was present at the meeting and stressed the need for quietness during study hours. He proposed that Ron Miles, nominated to every position but elected to none, be made Chief Suppressor of Noise. The new chairman stressed the need for complete co-operation amongst the committee, but the general atmosphere of the meeting seemed to indicate the residents were behind their new committee.

Royal York Ballroom Scene of Gala Evening

Natter, Natter, Platter, Platter, Patter, Patter.

At the final function of the Toronto Varsity staff held in Hart House last Friday evening, President Smith thanked The Varsity and its staff for their endeavours over the past one hundred issues, stating that it served as a centripetal force amongst the colleges and faculties where otherwise centrifugal forces might prevail.

The toastmaster for the evening was W. Hugh Kenner, the retiring editor who proposed the toast to The King. The toast to The Varsity was proposed by John Stevenson and replied to by E. Ross McLean while that to The University was proposed by George Forster and replied to by George Doner.

The meal and the dance which followed were the work of Blanche Stanley and John Rooke on the committee, while the miniature Varsity programmes were also a unique and humorous part of the evening's entertainment with Toast label Natter, menu label Platter, and dance program Patter.

A short intermission in the dancing allowed time for a typical Varsity sing-song in which Peg Wallace, make-up editor was head-chorister. As Ajax Editor "E" Caldwell and Engineering Society President "Mike" McAuliffe were present, a "Toke-Cike" was naturally called for, and as the "Blue and White" had closed the banquet so ended the dance.

Tuesday evening, March 19, the Royal York played host for the first time to the Skulcemen of Ajax at their first Engineers Ball, as 1100 students danced to the music of Art Halman in the hotel's main ballroom.

"It was typical of the zeal and enthusiasm of Engineers," remarked the President, Sidney Smith, who with his wife, was one of the patrons of the evening.

Director and Mrs. Gilley, also patrons, were present and Mrs. Gilley was impressed with "the excellent job of decorating and the color of the dancers" while Mr. Gilley commended "the good job of organization done by the committees." Dean and Mrs. Young and Professor and Mrs. Wright were guests of the dance, also as patrons.

The appropriate decorating of imitation set-squares, T-squares, slide-rules, and blueprints lent considerable color to the evening while a floor-show was provided during intermission. Joe Murphy acted as M.C., also doing impersonations of Sinatra, Crosby, Hope, Allen, Sparks and many others. Zena Cheevers charmed the audience (especially male members) with military and Spanish numbers in her own dancing wavy, while the famous Dionnes, Art and Vera, did some tricky feats in hand-balancing and novel weight-lifting.

Royal York authorities and students alike deemed it one of the best university dances held this year and already a dance is being planned for next December when the whole floor of the hotel will be used and three bands will favour the dancers.

Thanks from all Ajax are due to Director Cecil Emery and to Mike McAuliffe who organized the dance and to the following committe: Deacons—Connie Jones; Advertising—Pay Wicks; Tickets—Bill Moran; Programmes—Johnny Profit; Date Bureau—Tony Sachs; and to Ted Hodgson for the corsages presented to the patrons.

WHAT A POWER-HOUSE!!

By O. J. LEMYRE

The 300 by 120 foot building with the magnificent chimney which is situated in the south-west corner of the northern area of Ajax is, however unglamorous it may look, a 24-hour necessity to both village and University. All lighting and heating, as well as water and lighting for emergency, originate in this building. Our tour was conducted by Mr. M. D. Riddell, night-shift engineer. The power superintendent is Mr. Dennison and the chief engineer Mr. Marks.

The normal electric supply of the area comes from Oshawa on a 60-cycle transmission line and is distributed through a 2200 volt switchboard. This supplies both the campus and the village. Should the regular source fail, an emergency supply is obtainable from 200 batteries, supplying necessary illumination for the operation of the emergency generator. This auxiliary equipment gives temporary supply to the hospital, recreation hall, and emergency exits of the academic area.

A fresh and fully chlorinated emergency water supply is on hand for any circumstance which might render the pump-house useless. The supply may also be used for fire-fighting as there is sufficient water to fill thirteen residence rooms. All these emergencies were allowed for in the construction of the plant as the possibility of bombing was always present in the minds of the war-wise.

During the winter two full railway carloads of coal are used daily. This enormous consumption produces a million and a half pounds of super-heated steam which leaves the plant at a temperature of 470 degrees Fahrenheit and is distributed through six miles of ducts. From railway cars the coal is dropped into pits from which it is carried by an endless belt to storage above the boilers. From here it drops to travelling hoppers which carry it in 1050 lb. loads to the boilers. The three huge boilers stand some thirty feet in height and the water in them is kept constantly analysed and chemically treated in order to keep down sludge accumulation. Due to the efficiency of the checkers the plant's operational efficiency is over 70%.

LOST: Brown leather jacket with yellow trimmings. Finder may keep all money, marbles, and tobacco, if he'll only return the jacket. Residence 731, Rm. 30.

I have lost a jacket. In it is a packet Of Ogden's Fine Cut.

I was in the house of Hart, When from me the thing did part, Who took it?

I am freezing cold and wet, I'll maybe catch pneumonia yet, Please give it back.

'Twas Tuesday night that it did leave me, And its absence sorely grieves me;

I'm cold as hell!

Won't the dear kind soul who took it, At me just have one wee lookit;

What a mess I'm in.

Take it off and give it back,

Money I do sorely lack,

To buy a new one.

To Publish Bi-Weekly During Spring Session

"Varsity Goes To Skule"

This is the first edition of the Varsity to be issued at the Ajax campus each Tuesday and Friday for approximately the next three months.

The paper is written, edited, and made up by Ajax students who try to maintain the same full timetable as the rest of the students. It is hoped that this will be an Engineers paper with jokes, cartoons, and articles befitting these, the only living combinations of gentleman, wildman, and wolf.

The Varsity office in Hart House Ajax is always open to complimentary, critical, and just plain interested readers and a member of the staff is usually present afternoons and evenings. All material for the paper should be in the office by 6.00 p.m. of Monday and Thursday evenings, although in special cases a later deadline prevails.

If each student of the campus were to write a three-hundred-word story, it would fill this paper for three years. Nevertheless, the staff is still not complete and it is hoped that every A-Jack will become a reporter in advising the office of news, features, and sports in residence, club, or classroom. This co-operation and interest will lighten the task of the staff and produce a more representative paper. The Campus Cat, which should be renamed for the Ajax writers, is to be written by all and sundry and if you can hand in a witty column, (it will be printable, we hope) we'll see that it gets into the column.

Felicitations . . .

Heartiest Congratulations to The Varsity and the Students' Administrative Council on this, the first issue of The Varsity published for the benefit of the Ajax Division.

Throughout the whole of the present academic session, the Editor-in-Chief and the Varsity staff at Ajax have cooperated most successfully in making the new Ajax Division an integral part of the University.

To the devoted and able Ajax Varsity staff now falls the full responsibility of collecting the news, editing and laying out the copy of the undergraduate newspaper, twice a week. This is a real achievement when it is realized that the Session at Ajax only commenced on January 14th.

My very best wishes to all those on the Ajax mast-head—I know that they will maintain the best traditions of the Varsity.

J. R. GILLEY, Director.

Chess Club Elections Took Place Tuesday

A brief meeting of the Chess Club took place in the common room of 727 last Tuesday. Andy Matthews was elected permanent president and Don Marshall, secretary.

The club is now in possession of a locker where members may leave their boards and men. The combination of the lock will be given to each member on payment of the twenty-five cent fee decided upon.

On Thursday evening, Hart House Toronto was the scene of a tournament between the visitors from Ajax and the home club, with the visitors coming off second best, to the tune of one to nine.

Swarms Of Eager Visitors Welcomed By Student Hosts

Ajax opened its doors to the public for the second time yesterday as over 1200 relatives and friends of students from both the Ajax and Queen's Park divisions toured both the Northern and Southern areas for most of the afternoon.

Arriving by automobile or chartered bus, the guests were taken by student buses to the Southern area where Lecture rooms and Laboratories as well as Drafting rooms were inspected. Before leaving this area, some of the visitors entered the Engineering Society Office, the Technical Library, and the University Press Book Store.

Returning, again by bus, to the Northern area, further inspections were made of student residences which were open for all. The cafeteria, the circulating Library, and the Laundry Store were next in order as a steady stream of interested parents kept these places full. Then to the Hospital (only to look), York Hall, administration centre of the University, the Recreation Hall, Arthur Lodge, staff residence of the campus, and back to Hart House Ajax where the recently finished common room, made from library chapel, and The Varsity office are located.

The visitor, went across University Drive to Laundry and Bathing, and further to the Personal Services building where the Barber Shop, Shoe Repair and Valet Service are housed, who found most of the pedestrians well ready for supper and a chance to sit down. Those who remained were served a typical student meal in the Cafeteria where many found friends to compare notes with over coffee or cigarette.

Among the notables present was Mr. C. A. G. Matthews, associate of the Simon-Mathews Co., who is a company in conjunction with the famous Canadian artist, A. Y. Jackson, produced the Canadian series of silk-screen prints which are the decoration observed in the Cafeteria. Also present was Mr. Taylor Stanton of the YMCA, World Committee, who has just returned from a conference of that organization in Switzerland. Dr. W. J. Dunlop, Director of University Extension and Publicity, was also in attendance, as was Mr. Lear White, Vice-President of the Alumni Federation. Miss A. E. M. Park's, Associate Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, on seeing Hart House, remarked "the change in the interior decorating and furnishings since I was here less than a month ago is almost miraculous." President and Mrs. Smith and Director and Mrs. Gilley were very gratified with the number of students, especially the many from the Toronto campus, who brought their parents and relatives to see the latest advancement in Canadian educational institutions.

In the Recreation Hall at 8.30, an informal dance was held for which over 150 girls were imported from Toronto and Oshawa. Mrs. J. R. Gilley acted as hostess and records provided the music.

Hanging Over

Our positively final appearance last March 15 has gone the way of all such finales; and here we are back before the footlights for another bow, this time clutching a successor by the sleeve.

El Caldwell, Editor-in-Chief of the Ajax Varsity, takes over the paper and its traditions with this issue. We are writing this in Toronto, and as this, the first exclusively Ajax issue and the first Issue No. 101 in all The Varsity's history, goes to press, we can truthfully report that we have not seen one line of what is to appear in it. The issue, with its headaches, and its merits, is all El's. For that matter, what appears in The Varsity is no longer any of our business. We are getting off here. The paper is yours now, to make of it what you will. Editor Caldwell will have to pick and choose, trim and edit, rewrite and make over. But until late June The Varsity is yours, and what it will say is what you want it to say.

If you have not yet turned out as a staff writer, we suggest that you give newspaper work a try. The Varsity can be one of the principal forces in Ajax life, if you will let it and help it. Working on The Varsity will help you master compact, vivid, sense-making English. And working on The Varsity can be your contribution to the whole Ajax community.

* * *

This is our first and only opportunity to say a word to the Ajax citizenry without the entire student body at Toronto listening in. All we can think of to say is "Bravo!" Ajax has developed a spirit far above the hopes of anyone who worked on the project in its incubator stages. Ajaxians have made the best of an admittedly makeshift arrangement, and have developed, as (we cannot forbear to recall) The Varsity last January challenged them to develop, a college life of their own.

We confidently expect that they will develop a Varsity of their own. The Varsity has spent sixty-five years in the mystical process of always changing and always being itself. It has mirrored faithfully the changes of tone and atmosphere that have crossed the campus, from the Victorian classical atmosphere, through the invasion of women, the first war, the jazz age, the hungry thirties, the austere war years, and this last hectic year of post-war expansion. Yet it has always preserved something peculiarly its own: a tradition of level-headedness, of sound comprehensive journalism dedicated to higher purposes than amusement: to clearer thought and better citizenship.

The Varsity thus presents an interesting test of Ajax stability, since it is the only tradition imported without change onto the Ajax campus.

If Ajaxians can make it their own and at the same time not do violence to those features which make it itself, they will have demonstrated that they are potential citizens and potential thinkers. The essence of solid fruitful citizenship is not progress but continual reform. Progress is a false god. It means leaving things behind. Reform, or growth, is a more rooted and substantial process; it means leaving things inside: as a tree does.

* * *

The Varsity, then, is yours; but not yours to change so much as yours to tend. Everyone who has worked for The Varsity, everyone, almost, who has read The Varsity, feels a certain sentiment about it. There are thousands to whom The Varsity is the University. We want The Varsity to serve you, and help you, and amuse you. We want you to write the editor, indignantly or loftily, to tell him your views; we want you to supply him with news of your interests. But come next fall, when campus-wide circulation starts again, we want to get the old Varsity back, essentially unchanged; perhaps with a few good ideas added, which can be an Ajax legacy, but still The Varsity as we always knew it. An institution which has grown and served a great University for 65 years cannot be wholly faulty. It has much to give to the University's newest enterprise.

We say no more. It is in your trust.

—W. H. K.

Art, Music and Drama

Pianist Ajax Guest

The second in the series of Sunday concerts sponsored by the students of the University of Toronto, Ajax Division, was held in the music room of Hart House, Sunday evening with Andre Asselin as guest artist.

A. Mathews introduced Mr. Asselin, pianist, who was winner of the Underwood Scholarship which brought him to Toronto to study with Mr. Ernest Seitz for a year. Mr. Asselin was heard over C.B.C.'s "Concert Artists of Tomorrow" and also at a recital at Queen's Park Hart House on the first of February.

Mr. Asselin, a brilliant artist, gave a very well received concert, with Chopin's Fantasia, Impromptu, and Mazurka in A-minor being most appreciated. For an encore Mr. Asselin played a Study in B-flat, written by his previous teacher, Descarries, and not, as yet, published. The Cradle Song, by Sapelnikoff, was his final number.

ED. SOKOLOWSKI.

"Bean Be-Bops"

Even the Hawk has been struck by the Be-Bop bug, or so one would believe after hearing the Hawkins—Wilson performance Saturday, March 16. The West end nitery where the boys held forth were initiating a new table service. Perhaps the new surroundings awed the masses into a state of semi-consciousness; perhaps there just wasn't a large enough audience, but in any case the combo never did quite "feel the crowd" sufficiently to become inspired. The Bean obtained his usual rich tone of such tunes as "Sweet Loraine" and "These Foolish Things" with Wilson shining his brightest on the latter. The five-man crew alternated hot with sweet, the latter showing Teddy and Coleman to their best advantage.

The piece everyone waited for, "Body and Soul," came near the end of the two hour program. The Hawk was terrific with his full tonal effects minus his frequently occurring honk. We had our money's worth in that one piece. Max Roach, drums, Fred Webster, trumpet, and a solid bass man whose name we didn't catch, rounded out the fivesome. Roach has excellent taste and a good beat which had the three man rhythm section jumping. Webster's trumpet we couldn't appreciate as a solo effort but showed up nicely in the ensemble work, except that he and Hawkins ran their standard riff into the ground before the night was over. A somewhat disappointing show despite the terrific piano-pounding by Wilson and tenor work by the Bean.

Canadian Campus

Future of C. U. P.

By BARBARA JONES

From New Year's Day, 1938, when the Canadian University Press came into being as an attempt to provide a national press service to college or university publications in Canada, until January, 1946, any signs which the organization gave of life were few feeble and far between. In spite of repeated efforts to realize its possibilities as a unifying force between geographically isolated Canadian universities, a frequent exchange of papers, less frequent exchange of wires and still less frequent conferences, plus a constitution and a book of rules, were all that proclaimed its weak and inefficient existence.

In a burst of post-war enthusiasm the 17 Canadian University Press delegates, from as many universities, who met in London, Ont., before Christmas, initiated a daily wire system between member papers which has been in operation since Jan. 15. Daily wire bulletins are collected by three central bureaus in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, edited and redistributed to regional papers. This service, in addition to several new exchange features and a CUP Institute of Student Opinion operated by Queen's University are the total achievement for 1945-46, but bigger plans are already under way for another year.

The main theme for the future is the continuation of the new wire service, but faster and more efficient. CUPISO will be continued plus a nation-wide economic poll, to ascertain the average cost of living for university students. Methods of scientific research for this poll will be taught to every Canadian university so results will be uniform.

Another hope for the future is a nation-wide Varsity radio network which would tie up with CUP, particularly in the broadcasting of university news. Financial assistance, one of the most important factors in furthering present plans, may be forthcoming from one of the benefit foundations in the United States as a result of negotiations conducted by the present national executive.

The Canadian University Press, as an organization, has had its year of expansion too.

Books

Contemporary... Review

By BOB WEAVER

I am reviewing The Song of Lazarus (Macmillans in Canada, $2.50) at this time because it was published several months ago and more importantly because it is an interesting and important collection of poems. The author, Alex Comfort, is a young British novelist and poet whose intensely philosophical symbol-ridden novel, The Power House aroused some critical controversy last year. Like a number of young British writers, he is politically an anarchist.

Comfort's poetry is dominated by his political sympathies. It is therefore explicitly dedicated to a hatred of all authority beyond the individual, to identification with the oppressed, and to a somewhat idealized conception of nature. The politics do not always aid the poetry; in general the intensity of the protest is diffused by the very anonymity of the hated authority. Men march to war, civil servants act for the government employing them. You cannot hate the men who do evil before a command; yet the ruler tends to become only a generalization.

For this reason, the poems addressed primarily to individuals become most poignant (The Orioles—for Stefan Zweig). And for somewhat the same reason there is an unhappy tension in those poems in which Comfort expresses his sympathy for the men fighting a war in which he does not believe.

Comfort uses little imagery—too little, in fact; but the images he does employ are generally simple, sensitive and apt. And he employs his knowledge of nature with a fragile compelling exactitude which reminds me of D. H. Lawrence, an earlier contemporary whose attempts to reconcile the individual with society contained similar unhappy frustrations.

But there is good poetry here, and few would be inclined to quarrel with at least certain of the aspirations of a man who writes (in the title poem, The Song of Lazarus):

I am too much at one with the dead ever to fear them again. I am too much bound to those who have lost the power to speak ever to call my voice my own.

Packed Full. Crowded Out.

- You Bet! -

This year the University has been inundated with students—especially those ex-service men who have been missing all the fun for the last few years. It has been estimated that there are now 75,000 students here and the overcrowding is severe.

Hardest hit of all is the Faculty of Dentistry which has had trouble finding people with mouths large enough to enable 23 dental students to work in them at the same time. This difficulty was overcome however by extracting all the teeth of the patient and distributing them to the students who take them off into little corners and drill holes in them. Since this method of drilling is not harmful to the patient, the system has been adopted in most Canadian Universities.

Astronomy students too were handicapped by lack of equipment since there is only one telescope in the Observatory. A plea was out over the radio for binoculars and the citizens responded magnificently sending in 8000 pairs of binoculars. These were distributed among the astronomers, but were shortly recalled when it was discovered that they were being used to look at other things than the planets or the fixed stars for that matter.

A sharp increase in the number of drownings in the crowded Hart House pool gave authorities something to worry about until the problem was brilliantly solved by removing the water from the pool. Drownings since then have been reduced to the barest minimum, although there have been some nasty cases of bottled beer (a dread disease that has been brought in from the Orient by migratory Budgegars).

Six-tier beds in Whitney Hall have been one symptom of the crowded conditions at the U. of T. Hermione Gingivitis (II Botanical Hydrographics) has testified that she has developed sinus trouble from having her nose pressed against the ceiling every time the

By Peter Philpott

According to Buff Horton, The Ajax Athletic Supervisor, vitamin pills will be in great demand here at Ajax for during the coming months there will be a sport for every man and every man a sportsman.

There are now four tennis courts, two more to be added. The three hockey cushions are to be used for box-lacrosse or borden-ball and as the present lighting is to remain some hotly contested battles are expected under the floodlight. Two soft-ball diamonds east of the cushions and one north are now just about finished. Four Football fields directly east of the Rec. Hall will be used when the mud finally settles for soccer during the summer months and rugby in the Fall. For those who don't get enough track running through the corridors a cinder track will surround one of the football fields. Horsemen will be pleased to know that four horse-shoe pits are to be placed between The Rec. Hall and Arbour Lodge. Morale amongst the students is essential and to boost the morale of the men an archery range for the girls behind 721 is planned.

League competition for the coming months is to consist of soft ball, box-lacrosse or borden ball, tennis, horse shoes, soccer, track and field, and golf.

Athletic Night will be held next Monday at 7.45 p.m. when The Dean Young Pennant will be presented either to Jerry Crossman's 738 residence or to the second place Johnny McCreedy's 737 residence. Hitting The Jack Pot Revue, high-lighting in their act GIRLS, will provide musical entertainment. Not only that but our own Hot Jacks under Ted Snider will be on hand and from what your roving reporter has seen lately and heard these boys have something hot to offer.

The flag pole erected on the north east side of College and Queen is not to be used by athletes or any other person for the purpose of maintaining a look out on Res. 721. The pole flies the Dean Young Pennant and the winning residence number.

If you want your House Sports written, write them up yourself and have them in Monday or Thursday evening.

people in the five beds underneath inhale in unison. Miss Gingivitis has been much better since recordings of the Toronto Symphony have been played over the P.A. system every night at bed-time.

Hart House used to be a place to go and get a meal at lunch time but it is so overcrowded that people have become fed up standing in queues with the result now that no one ever goes there any more for lunch, and all the food that is cooked has to be given away to the pigeons in Queen's Park. The pigeons are getting so fat that they are unable to get up and walk away after they have had a meal: with the result, comma, that Queen's Park is now full of pigeons who are sitting down and blocking the paths that people take for short cuts across the park. This has aroused the city fathers to action and the other day they went up there and read the Riot Act to the pigeons, but the pigeons just sit there—pretending that they can't speak English and smiling slyly to one another.

Another result of the overcrowded conditions here has been the increased number of men that the girls have been able to choose from. This left a lot of the men in the lurch so to speak, and they decided that something drastic would have to be done about it. So, they (the men, that is) banded together and deported the most active males to a small village some thirty miles east of here named Ajax. This eased the situation for a time, but rumor has it that the women are organizing secret bus trips out to Ajax every other night. "There's no holding them" declared one of the residence deans in an interview with The Varsity.

The library, usually deserted by students during the greater part of the year, has been filled to capacity since the beginning of the term. This was thought by members of the faculty to be a sign of the increased interest of the student body in academic work, but it has recently been discovered that the students are not going home at night because they have no home to go to and that they are actually living in the library and have set up a soup kitchen in the English Seminar.

In order to relieve the acute traffic jams that occur in the U.C. Rotunda at the changing of the hour on the hour, a rapid transit system has been installed whereby students can get from one room to another in U.C. without passing through the corridors. This is achieved by greasing and re-routing the garbage chutes. After several embarrassing incidents, little mats were supplied for the commuters to travel on, and several thousand season tickets have already been sold.

The staff of The Varsity, the undergraduate newspaper, which has numbered from 50 to 200 has by reason of the increased registration now gone up to 51 to 201, and there is never enough room in the office to do the work that has to be done to get the paper out to the readers every morning. A courageous step was taken by the editor when he bought Convocation Hall from the Iroquois Indians for $27.50. This may come to the reader as a bit of a surprise, but it is a fact that Convocation Hall has never been the property of the University but was loaned by Squatting Bull for the purpose of storing goldfish for professor Satterly's lectures. Now that Satterly has run out of goldfish, Convocation Hall has reverted to Bending Bull (Squatting's brother). Squatting was killed overseas in a positive reaction) and THAT IS HOW I MET YOUR GRAND-MOTHER. —JAKE

Toronto Students Geneva Delegates

Two Toronto students — Moiley Clarke of Emmanuel College, president of the S.C.M. and Ellis Evans of Trinity will be members of the Canadian delegation to the World Student Christian Federation general committee conference in Geneva.

Representatives from all universities in central Canada will meet at Lake Couchiching in September. During the summer S.C.M. members will be engaged in "Student-in-Industry Camps" in Brantford and Welland. These camps are designed to give students an opportunity to work in factories producing a variety of products—farm implements, textiles, canned goods—and to attempt to ascertain the proper relationship between Christianity and industry.

FANTASTIC? Yes . . . but so simple! Engineers discovered how to make a tiny steel ball revolve and write. Chemists developed the special Satinflo ink that economically feeds the writing ball. Result . . . a new and amazing writing instrument.

- Does not smear or blot and dries instantly on writing.
- Does not leak at stratosphere altitudes. Pressure cannot make it leak.
- Writes on cloth without blotting or smearing.
- Writes "under water" or in the snow or rain. Dampness or wetness do not smear the ink.
- It is the finest writing instrument known for making carbon duplicates. Makes from 6 to 10 clear carbon copies, depending on thickness of paper.
- Doesn't need to be capped when not in use. The ball is always ready to write without shaking or pumping in.

Toronto Ajax Societies Hold Joint Meeting

Last night at Arbour Lodge, the Ajax Engineering Society played host to the Engineering Society from the Toronto Campus at a dinner. A joint meeting of the two societies followed, the first one of its kind. There were about 40 members present. Among them was Bill Daniels, president for the coming year.

During the meeting Professor Wright spoke about the desirability of unity between the two bodies and expressed the hope that the existing unity may continue into the future. "So far, everyone has used good common sense," he said. Jim Brown and Gord Beatty, the vice-presidents of the respective branches outlined joint social programs for the next year, consisting of a Skule Dinner to be held in November at Ajax, a Skule Night to be held in November, an Engineers' Ball for December and a Skule "AT HOME" for January. These events will be joint affairs and tickets will be distributed proportionately among the four years of Toronto and Ajax. The new council set-up was outlined. This will consist of a President, a secretary and treasurer. There is to be a First Year Executive with its president, secretary-treasurer at each of the two camps; also Second Year executive consisting of the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and Athletic Representative. The overall Executive will consist of the President of the Toronto Branch, the President of the Ajax Branch, a first vice-president from Toronto, a first vice-president from Ajax, a second vice-president from Toronto and a second vice-president from Ajax. This body will meet alternately in Toronto and at Ajax.

Murray D. McCullough, the retiring president spoke and outlined the present set-up, attributing much of the credit for its success to Professor Wright, the executives at Ajax and at Toronto, and to Dorothy Clarke who opened up the Engineering Society Stores at Ajax.

All members felt that co-operation was essential to success. "There must be unity between the two societies," said Mike McAuliffe.

Camera Club Gets Gen From Noted Physicist

Last night 75 camera fans listened to Professor W. K. Jackson of the Department of Engineering Physics while he gave his talk on Photography from the standpoint of the amateur photographer.

Professor Jackson had a very good collection of slides taken in England, Scotland, Channel Islands and Germany. His first set of slides were black and white taken while using different filters, lenses and subject matter. Dr. Jackson explained each slide as he went along and pointed out advantages and disadvantages in using different types of filters and lenses and long range photography. His second collection showed the use of colored film and filters for various color schemes. Dr. Jackson's stereo photographs were of great interest to all who were present. He explained the uses of stereo in measuring contours on relief maps, understanding complicated machinery and as an aid to subjects which use three dimensions such as astronomy and Descriptive Geometry. The stereo's were viewed with polarized, three dimensional glasses supplied during the meeting.

During the first world war Dr. Jackson did extensive research in developing cameras and equipment for aerial photography and during World War II, Dr. Jackson again rendered valuable services to his country and the allied cause by developing a contour machine for putting into relief plaster contour maps from aerial photographs. These maps proved of great value to the allied command in planning manoeuvres and campaigns. At present the Ontario government is employing these in the study of flood conditions along the Grand, Thames and Etobicoke Rivers as well as in the Forestry Branch.

At the close of the lecture, Mr. Emond thanked Dr. Jackson for coming out to Ajax and also stressed the fact that Ajax members were to consider themselves as a part of the Queen's Park Camera Club and were free to use the facilities afforded in Toronto.

The club is issuing membership cards on payment of a one dollar fee for chemicals and a one dollar locker deposit which will be returned. Each member will be supplied with a combination lock for a locker in which to store his equipment in the club room. "Cards and locks may be obtained any time from the Hart House Office, although it is not likely that many will be availing themselves of the dark rooms before the Easter Vacation," said Mr. Emond. "The dark rooms are completed and we have a large supply of chemicals," he continued. "There is some valuable equipment and members are asked to use it carefully," he added. A print exhibition is being planned for some future date as soon as the club is in full swing.

HART HOUSE AJAX NOMINATIONS OPEN

Hart House Aims, Ideals

For those not altogether familiar with the purpose and aims of Hart House Ajax, perhaps a word of explanation is in order. Hart House Ajax is an adaption of an idea begun in Toronto in 1910 when Mr. Chester Massey, then chairman of the Trustees of the Massey Foundation, undertook that the Foundation would erect a building which would be a centre for male undergraduates of the University of Toronto. The building known as Hart House was officially opened by the Duke of Devonshire, 11th November 1919.

Out of it, during the past quarter century, has emerged what might be called "the Hart House idea". This idea embodies these principles: that

(a) "A House devoted to student life should be efficiently managed and make full provision for the material needs and social activities of its members."

(b) "Without being 'high-brow' or educative, it must stand pre-eminently for the cultivation of the arts, more especially of painting, music, books; the drama; for the encouragement of the undergraduates' interest in public affairs through the medium of speakers and of debates; for the wise presentation of Christianity; for the introduction of a certain dignity and courtesy into daily intercourse; and for the formation of lasting friendships."

It is this "idea" which the Governors subscribed to in providing a Hart House at Ajax. It is for you to make use of it to the full, whether in seeking election to assist in its management or in partaking of

House, Arts, Camera And Glee Clubs Share

"Elections Thursday"

Hart House Ajax will follow the tradition begun by Hart House in Toronto whereby the care of the House and its welfare are in great measure entrusted to the students themselves. With this in mind the committees to be elected for Hart House Ajax are as follows: Arts Committee, House Committee, Camera Club Committee, and Glee Club Committee. Each of these committees is comprised of the following:

8 undergraduates,
2 senior representatives (i.e. from the Faculty or Administrative staff),

The Supervisor of Hart House Ajax (ex-officio),
1 additional member of the Hart House Ajax staff.

The duties and responsibilities of the committees are as follows:

- House Committee:
- (1) Concerned with the general management and social activities of Hart House Ajax.
 - (2) Responsible for seeing that the structure itself and all equipment are maintained in good repair.
 - (3) Deals with all matters that make for the comfort and convenience of members.
 - (4) Supervise the Tuck Shop and other revenue-producing departments operated by Hart House Ajax.

Arts Committee:
(1) Supervise all musical activities of the House, including recitals in the Music Room and the operation of the record set.

- (2) Responsible for the purchase of books for the browsing library.
- (3) Arrange fortnightly exhibitions of art in the Common Room.
- (4) Responsible for the activities of the Sketch Club.

Camera Club Committee:

- (1) Concerned with the encouragement of photography among members of the House.
- (2) Controls the use of the camera quarters, including the valuable equipment provided for the club.
- (3) Arranges exhibitions of camera work from time to time.

Glee Club Committee:
(1) Responsible for the activities of the Glee Club.

At the first meeting of these committees an undergraduate secretary is appointed, who sits with secretaries of other Hart House

Fire And Brimstone As John Satterly Lectures

By PAUL CONOVER

Professor John Satterly kept 900 engineers continually laughing, violently applauding, or amazed during his hour and a half lecture on the properties, uses, and misuses (mostly misuses) of liquid air, in the Recreation Hall, Wednesday night. This is the first time in the 34 years that he has been lecturing, that he has produced this exhibit of facts and showmanship away from the Toronto campus. Thirty cases were needed to bring the equipment for over 30 experiments that included everything from finding the specific gravity of liquid air to shooting a blazing wad of oxygen soaked cotton waste 30 feet towards the ceiling. He even took liquid air into his mouth and sprayed clouds of white vapor. "When you feel your back teeth begin to crack," he says, "it's time to stop."

"The temperature of liquid air is -300 degrees Fahrenheit," Professor Satterly said, and proceeded to "cook" an egg, tomato, sausage, orange, apple, and some parsley. Then he hit them with a hammer. They shattered like old glass, into small fragments, which he promptly distributed over the front rows of the audience. Of this Mr. Shepherd said afterwards, "He is the only man who can destroy food at Ajax and get applauded for it, and the only performer who throws fruit at the audience."

Reluctantly, "in the interests of Science," Professor Satterly froze a daffodil and a goldfish. The daffodil drooped and died on defrosting, but the goldfish lived. A second goldfish, he froze solid, and shattered into minute pieces. "The biology department assures me," he said, "that goldfish are like college examiners, they may have brains, but they have no feeling."

He had three different types of liquid air powered projectiles. The first was a cork gun. It consisted of a brass cylinder filled with liquid air into which he jammed a cork. "The pressure would reach 12,000 pounds per square inch if the cork didn't come out," said the Professor. "I'm not sure that we'll all leave this building alive." But with a loud report and a cloud of white vapor, the gun fired. The front row ducked and the back rows cheered. Professor Satterly also had two "V-2" bombs. One he shot off with a streak of flames into the audience. On the other he was a little too ambitious and it exploded in mid-air. The third projectile, "the most dangerous of all," consisted of a mortar from which he sent an eight-inch wad of blazing cotton 30 feet into the air.

Prof. Satterly saturated cotton waste with oxygen for what he said was the last experiment and maybe the last of the hall too. On lighting 10 feet of brilliant red flame shot into the air, staining embers over 20 feet. Soda crackers burnt with a two foot yellow flame that lit every corner of the Rec. Hall. "This is nearly pure oxygen," chuckled the professor with a glance towards the firemen, as he poured a flask onto the leaping blaze.

Almost magical are the effects produced by the low temperature of liquid air. Hoar frost was formed on an iron ball by means of a flame. Chemicals changed color due to the loss of heat. A weight was held by a lead spring. A hammer was formed from mercury.

Ten gallons of liquid air were consumed during the lecture.

WATER WATER EVERYWHERE

By OWEN J. LEMYRE

Far down the dusty road, beyond the academic area some several thousand yards, stands a building 100 by 60 feet on the shores of the lake. The place is kept immaculately clean and so it should be for this is our pump-house. Beside this building stands a tall water tower. Our tour of the plant was conducted by Mr. T. Williams, night pump-house man. Even if we engineers do not drink water we do use it for sanitary purposes.

The regular pumping equipment consists of three electric pumps, the largest having a capacity of about 1,100 gallons per minute. The two smaller ones have pumping capacities of 750 gallons each per minute. One of these latter supplies enough for our present needs. The original demand was three times what it is now.

The water is taken from a point some 450 feet from the shore through a conductor to a well which is 20 feet deep. It is from this point that it is pumped through the system after chemical treatment. The water is tested every two hours and is chlorinated in the proportions of 3 parts liquid chlorine to 3 by 10 to the 6th—Ah nuts who cares anyway? Sulphate of alumina is also added to settle any foreign matter. When there is an east wind the intake water is muddier and so requires more of the latter treatment.

The water then passes through a filter bed composed of gravel the size of pigeon eggs, gravel the size of a pea, and finally, very fine sand. There are 6 filter tanks with a capacity of 3 by 10 to the 4th. You engineers can figure that out. These are only half filled with water since the filter beds are also in them.

Should the main intake become blocked, the large 50,000 gallon water tank on the tower then comes into action. Due to its height a considerable head pressure is developed and this is used as a back-wash to clear out the intake. This method is also used to wash out the filters the wash being returned to the lake. The temperature of the tank water is kept at approximately 42 degrees so that it can never freeze, and is available for the above uses at any time.

Taking Over

One who makes the best of any situation, be it good or bad, has acquired an enviable status amongst humanity. So we of the Varsity staff will attempt, in this column, to carry on in the steps of an editorial master whose efforts have embellished this column over the initials W. H. K. for most of the last one hundred and one issues.

One does not realize the true responsibility of editing a newspaper, however small the paper, minute the staff, or infrequent its editions, until one watches an experienced rewrite pencil do an experienced rewrite job, or a skilled make-up editor do a skilled make-up job. A midnight drive through a "visibility zero" fog and the complications encountered at the printers in putting out a first edition add further to the foreboding feelings one gets in visualizing in true fashion ones duty to ones believers.

Nevertheless, it is my hope that we of the Ajax Varsity staff have some believers, and that their belief runs not only to reading the result of our efforts, but in contributing to the maintenance of its interest, variety, authenticity, and adequacy.

For surely we have a standard to uphold; the standard of those whose initial educational ambitions, motives, and perseverance fostered the U. of T.; the standard of those whose foresight and organizational aptitude brought, in some few months, a school of science in peace from a factory of science in war; the standard of those who in the last two months have watched, understood, and acted, as, for instance, in our own Hart House Ajax;

'Where once stood bleak and barren walls,
A thing of beauty grew;
Where stretched the long and lonely halls,
Now human din and hue.'

and most of all the "rate of change of improvement, with respect to time" of the Varsity over the 65 years of its existence.

It is quite natural to suppose that journalistic tendencies amongst Skulemen will not be as prevalent as amongst Arts Students, but certainly few engineers have been found lacking when criticism was necessary. Hence, the whole Varsity staff welcomes your 'Letters to the Editor', but asks that where these letters obligingly point out faults, the authors will also help, personally, to correct these failings. For is it not true that the only worth in criticism lies in the resulting correction.

Both literally and theoretically, the fields at Ajax are great and green and no better way exists of exploring and making known the theoretical fields than through our student publication. The fields of sport, of social endeavour, of student administration, and, above all, of academic enterprise have been exploited quite thoroughly. As this column stated Tuesday, "Ajax has developed a spirit far above the hopes of anyone who worked on the project in its incubator stages."

Now it only remains for us of Ajax to demonstrate this Ajaxian spirit to the world at large through our own endeavours and, further, through the Varsity. By developing a strong paper now, we will be ably fitted to do more than our part when the Varsity again becomes a bi-campus daily.

To use a time-worn phrase, let us make this Varsity for its next few months a paper of Ajax, by A-Jacks, and for Ajaxians.

FFUTS & SMAXE

De boids is yappin' in de trees,
De clothesline's swayin' in de breeze,
Hay-fever victims start to sneeze,
It's Spring!

De flowers is sweetly stinking too,
And every twisp says "I love you",
For love is in de air, woo-woo!
It's Spring!

And with exams just around the corner, we thought a few hints dropped here and there might not be unappreciated.

About mathematics—when you see d/x and d/y floating around, don't let them give you the d/t's. It's really very simple—Hubert points out that there's been a song written about it which starts off "d x me how I knew my true love was true—" But what the d. really means is, "a little bit of." So d.L. is a little bit of L. And so on. My old Irish mammy used to sing me to sleep with "d. heaven fell from out the sky one day."

And that, friends, is d.y. and d. wherefore of d. whole thing. As for other branches of mathematics, Al. and Geo. (Algebra and Geometry) are elementary, and trigonometry is a cinch if you believe in sines (We've got some real stinkeroos today, eh?)

All that needs to be known about electricity is that when you connect up a battery, the negative electrons go along the black wire and the positive electrons go along the red wire. And if you attend all the lectures, you'll just get ohmsick all the time.

You don't have to take a chemistry course to know that nitrates are cheaper than dayrates. Chemistry also teaches us that things expand when heated—which is why the days are longer in summer.

Physics is a more interesting subject. The harder you throw a yo-yo down, the faster it will come up. This is because of Newton.

I was playing with my yo-yo one day down by the lake. In that part of the country, the shore follows the edge of the lake for some few miles before turning sharply inland. There was a road following the shore, and a girl following the road, and I just wandered aimlessly along, admiring nature in all its forms, and making mental calculations as to the instantaneous accelerations of the gulls and such things. It occurred to me that if I increased my own velocity slightly it might be interesting. For I could then of course calculate relative speeds and all sorts of fascinating data.

She said her name was Mildred Pierce. She didn't usually talk to strange men, but she made an exception in my case. It seemed her poor father had lost all he had at Dufferin the previous week. Following the horses was the only way he knew of making a living—he used to have an important job in a travelling sideshow, but it gave him such a swelled head that he could no longer get his head through the hole in the canvas, so they had to let him go. But now he had a sure thing in the fifth at Woodbine that afternoon, and if he could only get a few hundred cash—through a cheque or money order—would do as well, she pointed out—he could clean up and pay off the mortgage. (didn't I tell you about the mortgage?)

The poor girl suddenly turned pale. "There he is now," she said, "our wicked landlord." I turned to look. "You our, sir!" I yelled to him, under my breath. But I doubt if he heard me. He was across the street leaning on a lamp-post (point of contact about five feet from its base). He was about six feet tall, so his feet were therefore about the root of six squared minus five squared from the base of the lamp-post, but he looked too ignorant to either know or care about this.

She took my cheque for two hundred, promising to repay it two days later. But that's the sad part of it. I can only assume that the wicked landlord followed her home and robbed her, perhaps even done her in. For I never saw the poor girl again.

And if there's anything else you want to know about mathematics or physics or absolutely anything, just drop a line to . . .

Art, Music and Drama

"Bechet Blows Blues"

Messrs. Gilman and Gerard presented their second Jazz Concert at Eaton Auditorium last Saturday, March 23rd. The programme commenced thirty minutes late with a medium tempo version of "China-Boy"; every member of the five-man combo having a short solo passage. From there on the boys departed from the programme as printed—a departure which we thought was good judgment. The more spontaneous a jazz session is the more sincere is the music. The sincerity of four of the musicians was somewhat clouded, however, by the circus antics of the fifth, Rex Stewart. Admittedly, Rex is one of the best cornet men in modern jazz—always will be unless he switches to Vaudeville—but his out-of-place mugging detracted from the fine, sincere, musicianship of soprano saxist Sydney Bechet, trombonist Benny Morton, and the others.

Modest Mr. Bechet, that grand old man from New Orleans, was the essence of sincerity in presenting his soulful renditions of "Summertime", "Black and Blue", and "Dear Old Southland". His tone varied from a dirty growl to a rich clear vibrato that only Bechet can obtain on a soprano saxophone. Syd stole the show!

Benny Morton displayed good solid teamwork in that great jazz classic "Basin Street Blues" and in "Sweet Georgia Brown". In the former he reached a peak in blues trombone the equal of which these ears have seldom heard.

Cigar-chewing Willie "The Lion" Smith played several piano solos including an original commercial tune by Mrs. Rosalind Freeman, of Toronto.

The highlight of the evening was a recital of the blues with Syd and Rex taking top honors. In Rex's own words, he played blues "as I used to play them with Ellington". His tricky plunger and open-horn blues technique were indeed reminiscent of many a fine old Ellington waxing.

Completing the line-up were "Specs" Powell (inclined to be loud) and Al Hall, that good New York bassist.

All jazz fans and those desirous of learning what jazz really is, will be on hand for the Billie Holliday date next month. The glamorous Miss Holliday will be backed by the Al Casey trio. Don't Miss it!

Library Opens

Have you visited the browsing library in your Hart House yet? Done in an attractive green and cream finish, fluorescent lighted, it has been open for the last three weeks, and has received very favourable comment from many students. Although the shelves are not yet full, the 500 books that are there represent a very fine selection of literature ranging from light Benchley and Thurber style to profound books on philosophy and science. Whatever your reading tastes, you will doubtless find there something to help you pass an interesting spare hour.

No books, however, are to be removed from the library room, for it is purely a browsing library. If you wish to have a book to read at home, go to the circulating library in building 742.

Speaking OF SPORT

Pete Philpott

Speaking of Sport is what they call this column, but all I can do is to comment on the sports. It looks as though an In Memoriam column will have to be printed in place of a sports page if you don't drive up your own house activities.

RUGBY spring training will start after Easter and to condition the laddy-boys up after the long winter hibernation Borden Ball and touch Rugby will be the spring tonic. The doctors in charge are Buff Horton, Athletic Supervisor, and his two assistants, Tom Davey and Jim Fallwell. Fred Doty, Steve Harrys, Jack Leaming, and John Roe all ex-Argo players are expected to help turn out a winning team and also play for the Blue and White.

The Athletic Committee is contacting several golf clubs to find out if privileges will be granted in the way of fees so that intra-mural golf tournaments can be held after Easter.

The tennis courts will be resurfaced after the frost and water have left the earth. An advanced reservation to play on the courts will be handled by the Athletic Office and so avoid congestion. Eventually there will be six courts and during the evening three or four of these will be used for team competition, the remaining will be left open for casual playing.

Keep an eye open for the next basketball game between 723 and 727. Last Monday saw two players in hospital. The best show of individual basketball competition is played by Ron Hall's 723 residence. With every man playing a game of basketball it's no wonder that 728 and 737 are keeping a wary eye on the close pressing 723 boys.

Perhaps the hottest club is the Commuters. That's right, they haven't lost a basketball game in March and for a team that has no time for practice that's really hot. Here are the undefeated basketball teams so far for the month of March, 724-A, 723-A, 730-A, and 722-B.

For what it's worth we're placing our bets on Ron Hall's 723 boys in preference to Jerry Crossman's 738 flock and Johnny McCreedy's 737 mob. Don't get us wrong, all three teams play good games but all except 723 lack good team work.

Here we offer a bouquet or roses to Mike McAuliffe, president of The Engineering Society and Doug. Andrews, The Society Sports Representative, who are offering their services to make Athletic Night a success on Monday. Incidentally did these enthusiasts know that the show was an all-girl show?

Attention Ajax Students!

Can you save a dime a day? Do you realize that for about 10c a day you can guarantee the payment to your family of $100 a month, or over $3 a day, for a full year after your death? Remember it is human nature for us to spend money, and difficult for most of us to save. So, why not adopt a savings plan that, really works? See your local Imperial Life Representative.

AJAX, ONTARIO

Ex-Leaf Is Ajax Student Engineer

Johnny McCreedy was born and raised in Winnipeg. Johnny first broke into minor hockey as a little urchin with the East Kildonan Midgets. After this he served in the Junior League with the Winnipeg Monarchs who in 1937 won the Memorial Cup. "Go West young man" and Johnny went west to the Trail Smoke-Eaters and in 1938 they won the Allan Cup. Now the Smoke-Eaters were Canadian champions so a tour of Europe ensued during which they played ten games and only had one goal scored against them and the blame can not be placed on our hero for at that time he had no anticipation to become an engineer and so had not practiced his forty beers home-work.

Next winter, 1940, John played for Kirkland Lake and guess what? Yes, they won the Allan Cup. The Toronto Maple Leafs heard of McCreedy who seemed to be on all the winning teams and so brought Johnny to Toronto either as a good luck charm or a hockey player. Well, Johnny was both, for in that year, 1942, the Leafs won the Stanley Cup and Johnny McCreedy scored 19 goals his first season. In the spring of 'forty-two McCreedy joined the R.C.A.F. and graduated as a pilot. Although in the Air Force Johnny-boy played for the Leafs last year and helped win the Stanley Cup.

Discharged over a year ago Johnny said, "Such hard work last season that I thought I'd get an honest job," so now McCreedy is at Ajax studying Mining Engineering. He coached the U. of T. Jacks hockey team.

Winter Sports End

The sports season is now drawing to a close for the first Ajax term. During the three preceding months two hundred and fifty eight bowling matches have been contested for and if you bring out the old slide rule, the pin-boys recruited from the town and from the University have watched thirty-seven thousand seven hundred bowling balls come hurtling at them. The highest score that we have heard of on the Rec. Hall alleys was bowled by a school teacher from the town. University students who apply practical engineering to their tactics have bowled over three hundred. Competition has been keen amongst the students, some teams winning by five pins. Residence 731 in one game averaged over two hundred and fifty-one.

Thirty intramural hockey games were played during the winter, with 736 winning four out of their four games. Although poor ice upheld the hockey schedule continually, the games that were played were zealously contested by the residences concerned and the student referees had many a handful to keep some heated battles from developing.

Volleyball has been a popular game played on Saturdays between sixteen teams who have competed in forty eight league matches. Last week 729 defeated 728 for right to enter group play-offs. Competition has been exceedingly keen. The calibre has improved one hundred per cent since the game was inaugurated last January at Ajax and so it looks like a real battle is in the offing when the semi-final and final matches are played a week this Saturday. Summing up the sporting spirit at Ajax, it is interesting to note the keen spirit that prevails amongst the ex-servicemen a carry over from their army life.

Halifax—(CUP)—Half the veterans attending Dalhousie University will be unable to continue their studies if forced to remain dependent on the government rehabilitation grant they are now receiving, according to a survey conducted by the Dalhousie Student-Veteran Association.

Of 210 veterans questioned over half stated they cannot finish courses they started due to lack of funds. The average monthly expenditure of these students is $90, $30 being necessarily drawn from personal savings.

Kingston—For the first time within memory of living Queen's-men, an undergraduate led his own orchestra to provide music for a Queen's dance when Boyd Valteau and his 15-piece orchestra, normally featured at the Jubilee Pavilion in Oshawa, played at a 48 year dance the other night.

(Tune of 'Bless 'em All')

Engineers, Engineers,
From Ajax we flock for our beams
Our Annex, Toronto,
Is learning right pronto
That we are the best Engineers!

With your cheers, drown all jeers,
Exams drawing near bring no fears
We study like beavers
Put profs. into fevers
But hell, we're the best Engineers!

From the east, from the west,
At Ajax we've had all the best
We came here to study,
We know every buddy,
And don't give a damn for the rest!

Possibility Of Improved Week-End Transportation

A special train for students will be leaving Ajax at 5.15 p.m. on Friday, April 12, and will arrive at Union Station Toronto at 5.50 (ten minutes to six) which will be in time to make connections with trains for Hamilton, Niagara Falls, Welland, London, Windsor and Stratford as well as points north. The fare to Toronto Union will be 95 cents return or if they so desire students may buy tickets direct to their home points from Ajax at the special week-end fares which will be in effect. Mr. Ramsden is the agent at Ajax and is located in the building between 705 and the garage. The place is open during afternoons. The train will leave Toronto Union Station for Ajax Monday, April 22, during the latter part of the evening.

A poll is being taken by the Engineering Society to find out if there is a sufficient number of students interested to make it worth while to have the Montreal-Toronto train stop at Ajax at 5.15 p.m. on Fridays to pick up students going into the city. This train will arrive at Union Station about 5.50 p.m. The week-end fare to Toronto, Danforth Station will be 75c and to Union Station, 95c.

It will be to the students' advantage to fill in the forms which are in the residences, as quickly and as accurately as possible.

Ajax committees to form, with a representative from the Engineering Society, the undergraduate representation on the Board of Stewards. The Stewards, therefore, are the final and senior governing body of Hart House Ajax, responsible through the Supervisor, to the Director of the Ajax Division.

NOMINATIONS OPEN TO-DAY

Only nominations for election to the House and Arts Committees will open to-day at 9 a.m. and close Monday at 5 p.m.

IT IS YOUR RIGHT TO SEEK ELECTION. IT IS YOUR DUTY TO VOTE ON THURSDAY NEXT.

The members elected will serve till October this year, when another election will be held to determine the representatives for the 1946-47 term. From the committee members elected at this time, 4 from each committee will be carried over to the succeeding committees in order to provide a maximum of experience and continuity from this year to next.

Elections for the Camera and Glee Club Committees will be held at a later date. Only members of these clubs will be eligible to vote for candidates for the respective clubs.

Lament Of A Student's Wife

(With due apologies to all poets living or dead)

When I was just a little girl
I oft' by windows tarried,
And gazed on all the lovely things
I'd buy, when I was married.

My husband would be tall and strong,
And ride a limousine;
No knights in shining armour
For this modern little queen.

A maid to do my sweeping,
And one to pour my tea;
A husband quite devoted—
His every thought of me.

The scene has changed—I'm married,
The limousine's a phony;
The gent I got prefers to use
The good old Shanks's pony!

A maid to do my sweeping,
And one to pour my tea;
I never thought they both would look
So very much like me!

My husband says he loves me, (Whenever he has time)
But mostly he is buried
In Chemistry, sublime.

He goes to school each morning,
With Timoshenok and Young;
I balance eighty dollars per,
Unseen, unheard, unsung.

My story now has ended,
Or is this just the start?
It seems that all my dreaming
Put the horse behind the cart!

Aims, Ideals

the facilities which it offers.

On a campus whose physical surroundings remind one only too well of the war-time atmosphere he or she recently left, it is more necessary than in Toronto even, to have a retreat where there is available under one roof, a browsing library which possesses most of the books you wanted to read but to which you never had access when you had a few spare hours, a beautifully-proportioned music room in which regular musical recitals are given and in which also there is a fine Steinway grand piano for the enjoyment of members. There is the Common Room in which regular exhibitions of pictures are shown and a wide collection of current periodicals are available. There is the Record Room complete with a wide choice of recordings and an excellent record player. There is the Chapel (soon to be completed) under the direction of the Rev. Carl Swan, and whose office adjoins the chapel. In addition, the general offices of Hart House Ajax are located here, as well as the offices of the S.A.C., the "Varsity" and the Advisory Bureau for ex-Service Students. Finally, there is a Tuck Shop where light snacks are available and a chance to "bull".

Other facilities under the direction of Hart House Ajax, but located in buildings nearby are the Camera Club, now completely equipped and open to students for a small fee to cover the cost of chemicals supplied; the Hobby Club; the bowling alleys and movies in the Recreation Hall; the Billiard Hall, the Barber Shop, Shoe Repair and Cleaning and Pressing, in the Personal Services Building.

All the Hart House Ajax facilities, organized in Toronto during the past 25-year period, are your heritage. The heavy work has been done; the Hart House "idea" proven essential. It is for the undergraduates of Ajax to shape this idea, not only to the conditions on this campus and to their own philosophies, matured as they have been by the war, but to shape an idea which has been accepted in the University of Toronto as well as most other universities on this continent as an important corollary to the attainment of a "true" education. Last of all it is an opportunity for you to use the democratic process in the management of Hart House Ajax.

IT IS YOUR RIGHT TO SEEK ELECTION. IT IS YOUR DUTY TO VOTE ON THURSDAY NEXT.

MORE SLEEP

There will be no sports events next week with the exception of the usual Saturday morning Volleyball games. There will also be Volleyball games tomorrow morning.

WAIT 'N SEE

At the time of going to press the new art display in Hart House was not ready but it is supposed to be very good. So watch for Tuesday's issue which will carry a full write up.

WHAT A LINE

If you don't like the way the boys are writing for The Varsity be sure and drop them a line. On the other hand like most people the boys need encouragement; so if you do like some particular article be sure to tell them about it. It will help make for a better paper.

LOST IN A DAZE

Remember the fog of Monday night? The residences were barely visible except for 730 which stood out, by virtue of the red light over the door. While you were in a warm room studying, dark figures were moving through the grim mists of the night. Now and then one on another would pause, glance over his shoulder, then hurry on.

Who were these strange creatures? Why, Ted Snider and his Hot Jacks on their way to the Music Room in Hart House to rehearse for next Monday's Athletic Night. Do not miss it. It's good.

SOMPIN' FISHY

Members of the Be Dumb to Kind Animals Society will be glad to learn that Pearl and Buck, the only two survivors of Dr. Satterly's lecture of last evening are resting quietly in the goldfish bowl of Residence 730. (viz. the bathtub). Both are doing nicely, thanks Pearl was the one that was frozen.

Special Arts Course Opens Today

Today the doors of Toronto University are opening to admit over 550 students, all of whom are ex-servicemen and women. They are starting on a special summer course which is given mainly in First Year Pass Arts, although some subjects in Commerce and Finance and Honour Law are being provided to enable those who wish to enter these courses in their second year to do so. A large number however are taking the course either with the intention of remaining in Pass Arts or of changing to Honour courses such as English, History, Political Economy or Modern Languages. To change into an honour course in one's second year he must make a Grade B standing or higher. Due to the fact that the Pass Arts year consists of five subjects and this special course allows the students to take only four, the student, if proceeding to a Pass Arts degree must take the extra subject in his second year. While the normal pass arts course provides a choice of over 25 subjects, there are only 16 being provided in this special summer course.

This course which is specially streamlined, will finish in August and the students will write off their examinations in September.

In an interview with Mr. J. E. Evans, assistant registrar at Simcoe Hall today, The Varsity was informed that while about 550 students had registered, there would likely be more registrations coming in during the next few days. There were about 25 girls enrolled. This evening Miss G. McAndrew, Assistant Registrar at University College informed The Varsity that among those enrolled there were a number from the Prairie Provinces, as far west as Alberta and a number enrolled from the Maritimes. Three Americans had enrolled and one student had come from as far away as Buenos Aires, Argentina. There were several married men enrolled. The course is open only to ex-servicemen and women.

Chorines Stage Big Show Swing, Laughter And Gals

The "Hittin' The Jackpot Revue" hit the jackpot for the 550 Ajax men who were at the Athletic Night in the Rec Hall last night.

Professor Wright presented the Dean's Pennant to Jerry Grossman of 728. Ted Snider and his "Hot Jakes" went to town and as one student said, "I don't think they'll top 'Hittin' the Jackpot' for a long time."

Dean Young was very ill and unable to present his pennant. In his absence Professor Wright did the honours, saying, "They tell me it's to be run up on the flagpole outside 721. They shouldn't take too long, and it shouldn't stay there too long."

With "Hi Neighbour" the ten blue and red clad chorines started the show. "Red Hot Mamma" Kay Kenny, the mistress of ceremonies, pianist and organizer of the show then welcomed the boys with some snappy dialogue.

The audience was enthusiastic as the chorines presented "High Kick", "Good Bye Mary", "A CAN CAN", and their finale, "Tribute to our Allies". The singing went from classical to swing. Mary Tobani moved the audience by her rendition of "Ave Maria". Isobel Gold sang "Springtime" and "My Buddy". Joan Hayward drew down a vociferous response from the audience

From Penmen To Plough

From a survey taken at the O.A.C. it was found that the greatest percentage of students will spend their summer vacation helping on the old farm. At this time when farm labour is so scarce there is a large demand for men to assist in the harvest.

There are, however, many others who will be engaged in other lines of work. A group of 25 ex-servicemen will work all summer as appraisers of farm lands under the Veterans' Land Act. They will be given a short course before starting on their job. At least 2 others will travel the show circuits in charge of the Dominion Experimental Farms exhibits. Many of the students are taken up with the idea of "Life on The Ocean Wave" (Great Lakes calibre) and may find themselves as stewards, or waiters on passenger ships. A number of other O.A.C. men are taking positions as camp leaders.

Arts Heavily Contested Requires Student Vote

House Committee Acclaimed

Nomination Day at Hart House ended up with ten men being nominated for the ARTS Committee. These: W. R. Coutts, 727-24; W. G. Grierson, 727-27; I. Grossman, 732-49; N. W. Hayman, 728-34; D. Jolly, Elm Road, Toronto; A. R. Knight, 736-13; J. R. McLaurin, 727-27; R. B. Turner, 726-30; B. N. Simpson, 728-20; and P. J. Stokes, 732-41.

From this slate of names, the students of Ajax are asked to elect 8 who will be responsible for supervising all musical events, such as recitals and record hours which will become a regular feature, arranging for all art exhibits, and responsible for all activities of the sketch club. They will also be responsible for the purchase of books for the browsing library.

A HOUSE Committee was also nominated. While the committee should consist of 8 members, only five names appeared on the slate at the end of the day. These will be put in by acclamation and additional men will be asked to serve on the committee.

Strikes!

No, this is not the labour situation, it's the Ajax bowling alley. Surely you have heard of it, or perhaps you did not know that Skulemen have other hobbies besides pool. (That's where we go swimming, honest Maw). It seems as though Ajax has been the envy of all male students at Queen's Park since the pool tables have been taken over there to enlarge the Toronto cafeteria. Now the Queen's Park men have food instead of food for thought. But here the Skulemen do not cast their minds on the nether depths of the poolroom, that den of iniquity. They play a more refined game, bowling. Bowling is truly a gentlemen's game originating in the Old Country, and there is even a tale connecting the game with Sir Francis Drake.

The bowling alleys, (there are four of them), are located in the recreation hall stretched out where the engineers can look at them with pride and bowl away to their heart's content. There is even a dustpan-engineer (jankor) to keep them in the best of condition. Not only have we all this but also neon lights and the price is a mere trifle, so that the Ajax alleys can compare with anything in the city. For the best in service the Skulemen are even catered to by connoisseur pinboys, young public school gentlemen recruited from Ellington to work part-time, and Ajax students, the latter getting preference. The students take advantage of all this by having each residence put up their own team with competitions nightly. And in the best of democratic procedure, the alleys are oc-

The slate for HOUSE Committee is as follows: R. S. Jones, 723-31; D. A. McCammon, 737-41; P. W. Philpott, 729-42; E. H. Snider, 722-26; and J. E. Trant, 724-10.

This committee will be responsible for the general management, care and repairs of Hart House Ajax, the supervision of the Tuck Shop and other revenue-producing departments operated by Hart House Ajax, matters making for the comfort and convenience of the members of Hart House, and the management of all social activities such as the Saturday night dances under the auspices of Hart House Ajax.

Voting will take place on Thursday in the Common Room between the hours of 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. and from 4:00 p.m. until 6:30 p.m. All students are expected to do their duty by turning out to vote.

VOTE AS YOU LIKE BUT VOTE.

In an interview with The Varsity, Bob Coutts had this to say: "I have had experience in the field of music as an obolst and in several musical organizations. My tastes in Literature extend from the "Decameron" to "Dick Tracy" and I know more ballads than anyone else on the campus."

I. Grossman had this to say: "I am in the Art Club; I have studied at the College of Art and the Art Gallery for five years. I am in the Music Club and I am in the Drama Club. The students should get variety in all the arts to suit their individual tastes from Ellington to Beethoven—from Shakespeare to Carmen Jones. Variety is what they want, and being a member of these groups, variety is what I can give them."

Here is part of our interview with Art Knight: "What have you studied in art?" "Beautiful forms to bow-legged bulls."

"In literature?" "Smith to Spinoza."

"In music?"

"All female choirs to Babariba." Norm Hayman, 728, had this to say: "Only the best effort possible on your behalf will be put forth on the Hart House Arts Committee by Norm Hayman."

Lastly, Peter Stokes had this statement to make, "Association with a sculptor has forwarded my appreciation in art, and has made me many friends among Canadian artists. All branches of Art interest me."

University To Hold Victory Convocation

ADMIRAL P. W. NELLES GENERAL H. D. G. CRERAR AIR MARSHALL R. LECKIE
President Sidney Smith announces that arrangements have been made to hold a special VICTORY CONVOCATION in order that the University of Toronto may pay its respect and gratitude to the armed services of Canada.

This special Convocation is to be held at 8:30 p.m. on Friday, April 26, when the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws will be conferred upon General Crerar, Admiral Nelles, Air Marshall Leckie, Captain Adelaide Sinclair, Colonel Agnes Neill.

These five distinguished citizens have all signified their acceptance of the University's invitation to attend this convocation and to receive the degree.

Cards of admission will be available at the Registrar's office. All who may find it convenient to do so are cordially invited to apply for cards and to attend this function which has been planned for the evening as possibly it is a more convenient time for most citizens.

Peace + Intolerance = War

Intolerance is a horrifying word; it stands for all the crimes and riots that occur because people think themselves superior to others because of race, creed or colour.

Whenever this happens it leads to unhappiness, at the least, and often to bloodshed or death. The major enemy in the past war was a country whose citizens set themselves up as superior to the rest of the world, and who pillaged and slew their bloody way across Europe. This was not a crime in their eyes; they were simply following the fates which would lead them to their rightful position as the rulers of the world.

But intolerance does not reach such a savage peak overnight. Racial discrimination is built up through the years by persons with a motive; persons "with an axe to grind." They are helped by the thoughtless, the careless, who pass on this insidious propaganda, until they have told these stories so often that they believe them.

This is a dangerous situation. It does not stop with stories. It leads to action.

Canada is a relatively enlightened nation. But our enlightenment and our high standard of education does not guard us against the pitfalls of discrimination. You have seen it throughout the country.

Last winter in Toronto a schoolboy was barred from a skating-rink because of his colour. Not a mile from this campus is a beach with a sign at the entrance which flaunts the slogan "Gentiles Only". This spring the Government, representing the people of Canada, took on itself the power of exiling citizens for no other reason than their racial origin. There exist in this country organizations which restrict their membership to persons of various creeds.

These examples are a few among many, each one of which is dangerous. It is not enough to abstain from taking part in activities of this sort. Racial discrimination should be fought at all times, actively. It is useless to fight wars periodically for a cause and to allow that cause to become despised in our own land. It is useless to say that it does not happen here and to blind ourselves to the facts of the case.

During the war most of us were in the services. We worked with, and lived with, men of every different racial descent, religion, creed and background. We proved for ourselves that we can all live together in unity. We learned, if we did not already know, that what a man is depends upon the man, not on his colour or his origin or his religious denomination. Here, while at university, we are proving it again. We must prove it to the country as a whole. We must prove it to the world so that our children do not have to go to war to learn it as we did.

Racial discrimination is a blot on humanity. It shows that we have not advanced very far along the road to civilization. We, as individuals, cannot alter it very radically. Working together we can do much to bring about that brotherhood of man for which the world has been searching since men first realized the uselessness of war.

Wherever it appears intolerance must be brought out into the open where it can be combatted. The persons who hope to profit by intolerance must be rooted out so that the world may realize the danger. The thoughtless must be shown the error of their ways. We should be intolerant only of intolerance. For only thus can we hope to make this world "a decent place to live in."

TORSO MURDER

This is the exciting story of Pincer Puss, the mosquito, who was laid one spring morning, and laid away the following fall. Although his life was short, his tale is long.

Pincer Puss, or "Pince", as his friends called him, was a very boring little fellow (if you get what I mean) and his hole-in-one average was the envy of all the other mosquitoes. Of course, biologically, allowances must be made for fiction as one might readily garner from the above, yet "Pince" would surely be deeply hurt if we didn't credit him with his fictional rights.

This sharp little fellow was born of noble-blooded parents (his father once took a round out of Mackenzie King, hurrah, hurrah) and was very jealous that although his parents were always high, he couldn't even fly. However, he gauged caught in the prop-wash of an Ajax student en route to the pool-hall one day and soon the rudiments of flight were well within his grasp.

"Pince" possessed probably the loudest drone, (not his girl friend; she was a queen bee) of all the central Ontario mosquitoes, and we have it straight from the feed-bag that this honor was easily gained by trying to make himself heard over the snoring in English lectures. ("Pince" was the keen type).

His wings were alleged to have been made from bits of formal dresses torn off at Whitney Hail formal, and were very flimsy. This was a definite advantage as, with transparent wings, he was able to have arteries, capillaries, and weather veins.

Among "Pince's" favorites were service men, and he used to spend hours rolling merrily in their brush-cuts, fighting terrific imaginary duels with great armies of dandruff.

Our gay little friend reached quite an age before enjoying his first cannibal meal. He attended a big basketball game in Hart House one Saturday night, and heard the blue-boys yell "First blood." So he took them at their word and believe me, it was plenty sore the next day.

After his first drink, "Pince" couldn't stop. He just went from one epidemic to another. His best friend pleaded with him; his queen bee became a princess, then left him altogether. Sometimes drunk with a recent debauch, "Pince" was slow getting away, and stunned by a fingernail in a near miss, would lie for hours unnoticed, unwanted, and generally forsaken, until the urge for "just one more" would give him energy to "rise and whine."

With his engine roaring in challenge, he would zoom drunkenly about, until some slight segment of bare flesh (be it accidental or deliberate bareness) would catch his eye and dive-bombing unmercifully, our hero-turned-villain would quaff his capacity and race off with both guns blazing.

However all good things must come to an end (ask Betty Grable) and so it was with our "dirty little bug"—er—ah, (don't read that too quickly)—well, one day Pincer got it in the Puss. And as the remains were scraped off, the other mosquitoes were heard to say with a sigh, "What a bloody mess."

And on his tombstone are written these expressive words: "Here lies the body of Pincer Puss. The last to swat him didn't miss; And the doggoned moral, sad to confess, Don't drink yourself to a bloody mess." (Signed): DNE-KEEW TSOL.

NEW MCGILL EDITOR

Montreal, April 1—(CUP)—Allan Knight has been appointed Editor-in-Chief of the McGill Daily for the 1946-47 session as announced by retiring editor Charles Wasserman at the annual Daily banquet.

Herb Shayne replaces Allan Knight as Managing Editor and Thomas Buck will remain as News Editor. Norman Wolfe will take over the duties of Sports Editor, replacing Herb Shayne.

Art, Music and Drama

First Record Recital

The record concert held in the record room Sunday evening was very successful and for two hours thirty enthusiastic music lovers enjoyed Tchaikovsky, Rossini and Beethoven.

In spite of the straight backed seats becoming progressively harder during the evening, all who attended enjoyed this first program immensely. As soon as chesterfields and furnishings are received, there is no question as to the popularity these concerts will attain.

Thespians To Toronto

The Dramatic Club, under the direction of Mr. Harry Brock, recently attended a program at the Conservatory of Music in Toronto. In an effort to acquaint his 'thespians' with the traits of the theatre, the Ajax Dramatic Director treated the adherents of the club to this series of one-act plays, (or parts of plays) put on by the School of Dramatics. The programme consisted strictly of drama from the time of Euripides' Medea (471 B.C.) to that of Van Druten's "Old Acquaintance" produced in 1941.

The local club is now working on a comedy farce called "Pack Up Your Troubles" to be presented shortly after the ensuing holiday.

New Art Show

As a student, weary with studying, ambles into the Hart House Common Room and settles down for a few minutes of well-earned rest, his eyes must necessarily peruse the galaxy of artistic works which surround him. If interested enough to look further, as any good engineer should be, he might compare his findings with the following notes.

He finds first Harvey Agnew's "Dual Personality", a painting reminiscent of a recent motion picture, "Madonna of the Seven Moons", in which considerable of the workings of the subject's mind are left to the imagination. Other works of Harvey include "Back to Studies" and "Northern Nightmare", the latter being in definite contrast to the former two.

W. M. Nicholls contributes numerous paintings, among them "Indian River, Port Carling" a deft and artistic use of varied color.

Erichson-Brown's works subject mostly nature scenes of Georgian Bay, best amongst them being "Thumbnail Sketches".

"Showy Lady Slippers" by Lacey contrasts measuredly to his "Composition", the latter being a geometric work.

"Wychwood Park in Winter" and "Road Through the Pines" are local works by E. W. Walked, while "Saguenay River Country" goes further afield in his tendency toward nature paintings.

Dean C. R. Young shows remarkable organization and directness, as his subjects have a serenity and peacefulness about them which create an artistic magnetism.

"The Birch Trees" and "Flowers" aptly describe the niceties of nature shown in the display of Professor Carswell of the School of Architecture.

A remarkable realism is shown in "Grand Manan" by Best, although the true portraiture can only be appreciated by one who has visited this lonely isle.

Further variety of study is noted in John W. Scott's "Figure Study" compared with "Strathblane Hills" and "River Scene".

Professor of German Barker Fairley shows magnificent effect with simplicity in his pieces and they have proved very popular with observers.

Hare's "Studio Stove", although similar in its simplicity, shows a much different covenance of idea.

These displays are changed every two weeks and any notes of interest about the works will be printed in this column whenever possible.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Pete Philpott

In case any person took me up on the prediction of last Friday I offer my humble apologies to any who placed their money on 723. Although your columnist still thinks that the points chalked up by Jerry Crossman's residence does not indicate the true calibre of team play. I do say that it represents a fair indication of team enthusiasm. Jerry said that his residence was right behind their teams. "They were all interested in sports so I guess that our enthusiasm carried us over the top."

This page may look like a page out of a log-book but if you grease the old slip-stick you will see how Res. 728 won the pennant. Each residence submitted five basic teams which had to include one basketball team, one volleyball and any three bowling teams. Jerry Crossman's 728 Residence gained a per cent of .812, closely followed by 732 who pulled off a close .800.

Last Saturday the quarter finals in Volleyball were played off in the Rec. Hall. The winners were 730, 737, 727, and 724. The outstanding players on 730 were Power and Harvey, for 732 Thompson and Metcalfe. McClaren, Dingle and McCreedy helped 737 to win a fifteen to three and fifteen to four victory over 736. Dodds, Kramer and Hall were the boys who fought a losing battle with 737. Olsen, Morris and Huhta were the spearheads of the 727 team against the hard fighting 729 sextet. Bill Glazier, Chapman and Webster put up a strong opposition against 727 in a three-game battle. Cousins, Desjardines and Buchman were responsible for the victory of 724 over 725 where James, Evans and Davis did their best.

Basketball finals will be fought off after Easter. Basketball has been played in two sessions, before March and after March. The winner of each session will play for the right to enter the semi-finals. In Group 1, 724 won both sessions and so automatically are in the semi-finals. 733A, winner of the first session plays 726 in Group 2. Group 3 has 730, and although it's early to make predictions, I believe that the future will show that this is the Championship team. In Group 4, 728 will play either 729B or 725B who are tied for first place in the second session. 730B won the first session and is tied for first place with 722B in the second session. Commuters are winners of both sessions in group 6.

25 Years Ago in Varsity
Solely For Gentlemen (?)

At the end of each year the graduating students pass on the trials and tribulations of college life to coming generations; they offer beacoup de warnings, advice, etc.
The final issue of The Varsity 25 years ago reversed this age-old custom by printing a letter expressing the views of a Schoolman-to-be: To quote:

"In 1927 or 8, I hope to be a student at S.P.S., so I am taking the liberty of writing to you again, this time about the foolish nonsense of allowing girls in Hart House tank, which I read of in my sister's Varsity. Gosh, who started the fuss anyway? Was it the women who are never satisfied no matter how much you give them or was it a bunch of sissies? If the girls ever got the use of Hart House tank in fifty years the whols building would be swarming with them. Of course the reason why I have decided to be a school man is because hardly any women go to S.P.S., but I suppose in 1927 there will be about a dozen mintzing through those halls. Well, anyways I am looking forward to the days when I will be going to Varsity just because I can drop into Hart House and feel absolutely safe from all girls, the only time when you can have any piece, because when there are any around you have to be on your guard all the time or they'll get you. Why even Ed. Jones, my best friend, is no more use at all. The other day we were walking along and he took to sighing and looking like a dieing calf. I knew he was waiting for me to say something so I didn't and at last he said, "Gee, she's a peach." I gave him a scornful look and said, "I suppose you mean the new girl. I saw her smiling at you all mornning in school, but I thought Eddie, that you could resist the snares of womenkind." But it didn't fiz on him as he was too far gone. All I said was, "How do you get that way?" And the next day I went to call for him and his mother told me he was up in his room and to walk right up, so I did and I found him standing before the mirror practicing grinning—for her of course to be used the next day. No-body has ever given me a desining look more than once because my eyes can cross better than anyone else's in the class when I want them too. But this is getting away from the subject, Mr. Editor. Don't girls get enough privileges when they were allowed to attend U. of T. lectures? Can't meir man have one place of retreat where he won't hear such things as, "Yes, isn't he cute?" and "Isn't his mustache darling?" Thank goodness, Mr. Editor, they are to be kept out of Hart House even after all the fuss. That makes one sensible rule that the University has anyways. Praise be to the Masseys.

If you could print this letter, I am sure many male parties would thank you because they think the same as me.

—LITTLE BROTHER

From recent letters and articles it looks as if the bastion still stands thanks to the "little brothers" of the world.—Ed.

Strikes!

casionally reserved for the staff.
Picture yourself now, standing in front of one of these alleys gazing at its gleaming expanse, the symmetry in its construction, its exotic beauty. Then with a deft twist of the wrist you nimbly seize one of these shining spheres, swing it back, trot a few dainty steps to the line and with eyes glued to the forepin you let fly. There it goes, traversing the vast distance into the path of those wobbly pins. Is it a strike? A spare? How many points? It's none of these because your ball has miserably dribbled down the gutter.

Have you stopped to consider why this is so? Why you have muffed it up so terribly? Why? It is because you have not played this game scientifically as an engineer does. You have not stopped to consider that s equals u plus one-half a - t squared taking into consideration the deceleration caused by friction. You have not swung your arm in an arc so that F equals M - A to make the ball follow the equation—did you realize that when you stand up and swing your arm loosely, the orthographic projection of your hand on the floor travels in simple harmonic motion? No, you didn't. Then as an engineer why not play the game scientifically?

It was decided not to hold any social affairs until after the Easter break, although a dance is being planned with the girls to be invited from Oshawa, Whitby and other nearby localities.

Scholarship Fund

Edmonton, Alberta, March 30.—(CUP)—A scholarship fund is to be established as a War Memorial by the University of Alberta. Unanimously recommended by a special committee of eight appointed by the Board of Governors last summer to advise with respect to a suitable memorial, the fund has been accepted by the executive committee of the Board.
Three-quarters of this fund is to be invested to provide permanently for scholarships and the remainder is to be available for immediate use. Priority in the award of scholarships will be given to children of war veterans.

Candidates Nervous As Votes Piled Up

To the candidates dawdling nervously in Hart House, as if waiting in a maternity ward, Mr. Emond brought forth the results of the elections of the Hart House Arts Committee at 9:00 p.m. last night. The nominees elected to the committee are as follows: P. J. Stokes, R. B. Turner, B. N. Simpson, J. R. McLaurin, W. R. Coutts, A. R. Knight, W. G. Grierson, and D. B. Jolly. The voting took place in the common room of Hart House between the hours of 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. and 4:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. with many students filling ballots. The House Committee of R. S. Jones, D. A. McCammon, P. W. Philpott, E. H. Snider, and J. E. Trant were put in by acclamation.

During the election campaign which lasted all week posters giving aims and qualifications of each candidate adorned the walls of the Tuok Shop providing a complete art show in itself. These posters displayed a wide range of subjects from beautiful girls to bow-legged cows.

The committee's duties will consist of supervising concerts, musical events, recitals, and record hours. They will also be responsible for the showing of Arts Exhibits and will be in charge of arranging the activities of the Sketch Club. The books in the browsing library will be taken care of by this committee and it will be responsible for the purchasing of new books.

Canadian Citizenship

What constitutes Canadian citizenship is set forth in the Government's Canadian citizenship bill, now under discussion in the Canadian House of Commons. It also sets forth the requirements which must be filled before a person may be a Canadian.

A Canadian citizen, under this new bill has the right (1) to receive a Canadian passport, (2) to enter Canada, (3) be deported from Canada under circumstances in which deportation is required under existing principles of international law, (4) to receive full diplomatic protection, (5) to own a Canadian ship or a part thereof, (6) to enjoy full political and economic rights within Canada (7) to possess the common status arising from allegiance to the Crown and the right to be and to call himself a subject of the King.

In 1939, the "Naturalization Act, Canada" came into force and required a person applying for Canadian citizenship to make a "declaration of intention" to become naturalized before applying for actual naturalization.

Aliens wishing to become full Canadian citizens must still follow the same procedure. For wives or husbands of Canadians or for non-British subjects, this procedure will be unnecessary.

Many people, particularly those living in the West who have proved to be good citizens but who, on account of being unable to speak English or French were barred from becoming naturalized, will find that a residence of twenty years in Canada will now qualify them for naturalization.

Newman Club To Be Formed

Tuesday evening Fr. Kyte, Roman Catholic priest from Pickering met a group of Catholic students in the music room. Some 25 students were present and a member from each house represented was chosen to act as Fr. Kyte's contact to the Catholics in that residence. A questionnaire was handed out to find what interests the students present had. It is hoped that after the holidays an extension of the NEWMAN CLUB of Toronto will be formed at Ajax. The next meeting will be held after the holidays and a notice of the time will be announced on all residence notice boards. A good turnout is expected at this meeting.

Ajax Rumblings

The Superintendent of Residences, Mr. Perry, has just issued another copy of his Bulletin. It contains a great deal of useful information re DVA cheques, Residence dues, and train service to name some of the major points. As the bulletin attempts to answer "the most frequently asked questions of the week", (but not the answers to next week's exams), it will save you time and trouble to read it.

Income Tax forms are now available at the Post Office. Ex-service personnel must also file returns, for we are now ordinary citizens and legitimate prey for Mr. Ilsey. Deadline for forwarding forms is April 30th.

DVA cheques will be paid before the Easter vacation, and will be handed out by the Housemasters on either April 11th or 12th.

The residents of 734 wish to express their sincere gratitude to choir which serenaded them with "Christmas Carols" at midnight Wednesday night.

The Varsity Staff wish the students good luck in all their exams. (They would also like a little luck reserved for themselves).

PRESIDENT SMITH ADDRESSES VETS

650 Veterans Enrolled In New Summer Course

Last Tuesday, in Convocation Hall, President Sidney Smith welcomed the veterans who had enrolled into the summer courses.

Over 650 men and women listened to the four speakers consisting of Mr. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House, Colonel Line, Chairman of the Advisory Bureau, Mr. MacDonald, General Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, and President Smith, as each of them outlined the plan that will be followed in this coming University year.

"There are those who stated that returned men and women will present special, acute and indeed extraordinary problems rooted in neuroses and other types of emotional instability," said Dr. Smith. "As a veteran of World War I, I resented and I resent those statements. We do not regard you as psychiatric cases. We will not treat you as peculiar or odd."

President Smith also informed his audience that the courses they were taking were so arranged as to give them a background for further studies in the fall. The four subjects that students had chosen are not easier than the usual yearly ones but neither are they harder so as to weed the men out. They will be taught in somewhat crowded quarters till the final examinations are over, by the professors who usually teach the subjects.

"You veterans of the Army, Navy and Air force, have still got the essential requirements of youth while on the other hand you have matured beyond your years," stated Dr. Smith. "We know that you are experienced and mature young persons who are anxious to take your places in civilian life, and who are eager to recapture the years spent in uniform."

Pointing out that the only way to be at home in the University was by being familiar with its functions, he said: "Now you are members of the University and of your colleges, get to know and understand the traditions. Be a good and loyal college man."

"Your aim is to be to bring peace and order to the world," went on President Smith. "In the name of the University I charge you at the outset of your courses to distinguish money from wealth, excitement from pleasure, interference from influence, notoriety from fame, self respect from false pride, speed from progress, the temporal from the eternal, and volubility from eloquence."

Ending his address, the President said: "You are now members of no mean caste—your college and the University of Toronto. I salute you, I welcome you and I wish for you happy and arduous years in the University."

The best way to tell a summer course student is by his vacant, blank face. He looks at all, sees all, and admires all but that is also about all. If this method of detection fails then look at the notebook; if they are flat or very full they belong to a new student.

As this reporter scouted around interviewing some dozen veterans, they all seemed "out of this world."

George Haines, represented well the average with his Air Force coat and bulging notebook as he said, "This place reminds me of Union Station where everybody is going in a hurry equipped with time tables and maps, yet they still don't know where they are going."

"The casualness of the campus amazes me," stated Keith Hickey. "Nobody pushes us around like in the service but leaves everything up to us. Sort of take it or leave it."

ALIS IN AJAXLAND

INSTALLMENT 1

Once upon a time there was a wee young chappie named Alistair Bannister—(We will call him Alis in order to make this story fit the title.)

Alis was born at the age of three, and immediately proceeded to astound his parents by quoting page one hundred and seventeen from Eschbach, namely "The shortest distance between two lines is a straight point". As he increased in stature he decreased in wisdom until people were wont to say, "He's just sliding farther and farther down, that Bannister". These and other comments caused young Alistair to draw himself up to his full three foot two and poignantly remark, "Well, what do you expect? All I get from you people is vacant Stairs!"

All through his four years of kindergarten, he showed promise. While the other kiddies cut out paper dolls, showing tendencies towards the various arts colleges, Alis was calmly filing his teeth, showing tendencies towards a certain building on College Street. (No, dear readers (?) not the Police Station). The reason for filing his teeth was never really determined, for while pronouncing the scientific word "slug", he got three bars, and in the excitement of all those nickels, bit his tongue off, so that from then on was confined to words of one syllable or less.

Having a liking for tinkering around with mechanical gadgets, it was not long before he had his father's car apart. This would have been alright were it not for the fact that in desiccating the car, he also took apart three other cars, two telephone poles, and a gentleman weaving along the street who gave him the name as Ray Milland. As this episode was rather expensive, Alis decided to see his banker. Upon entering the Bank of Commerce at the corner of Bay and Yonge, he was accosted by the manager, who said "And what can I do for you, little boy?" Alistair smiled sweetly and replied "Get the hell outta the way" and tapped him playfully with his socket wrench. After lining the Bank staff against the wall in factorial nine different ways (9P9), he retired, leaving the entire staff figuring out how many different ways they could give away $10,000, if only three of them are tellers. (The other six knew but wouldn't tell).

Although hampered all through public school by his difficulty in speaking, he got through quickly, partly because of pity showed by his teachers, but more often because of nylon stockings and automobile tires supplied by his father and presented to his teachers.

On graduating from public school, he found his inability to pronounce words audibly stood him in good stead, because he was immediately offered a job in the Gray Coach Lines Terminal announcing bus departures. After two years of successful announcing his duties were taken over by an Arabian square dance caller, who is still there, according to several commuters interviewed.

Alistair left the services of the Gray Coach company one day because of a difficulty arising with one of the drivers. It seems that the driver in question was new on the job, and to him Alistair's voice sounded so authentic that he spent three days on No. 7 highway looking for a place named Glubberfutz. This caused no end of worry to the head office and severe inconvenience to the passengers who were forced to bail out and parachute to safety when the bus ran out of gas.

Having reached the age of seventeen without severe difficulty, it was decided that he should go to the local high school, more as a test of the teachers' ability and stamina than anything else. Most of the teachers were female, which was lucky for Alis because his fondness for night life and good times came in very handy. He graduated in three years, and the principal was so glad to see him graduate

Readjustment

Our Editor-in-Chief, "El" Caldwell is leaving Ajax. He has enrolled in the special Pass Arts course offered on the Queen's Park Campus. To those who have been associated with him during the past few hectic evenings when the Ajax staff has had the responsibility of putting out The Varsity, it will be a loss and will mean a readjustment. Whenever we were in doubt there was always "El" on hand to advise. He was on hand to supervise the million and one details which go into the making of a paper.

"El's" heart is in journalism; that is the reason for his decision to change over to the Arts course, which he believed would provide a better training for a journalistic career.

If "El's" heart is in journalism, it still has room for The Varsity. While he was on the Ajax campus, The Varsity was his chief interest and there is no doubt that his interest in The Varsity is going to survive his removal to the Queen's Park campus. In his final instructions to the staff, he said, "Take care of my baby." We shall do our best to carry out those instructions, but when July comes around and The Varsity returns to its Queen's Park Office, "El" is going to have his baby returned to him.

Readers of our paper are still going to have the opportunity of reading news under the signature of E. G. C.

The Ajax staff wish him the very best of success in his new career.

Readjustment will be necessary on the part of the staff left behind. We are Engineering students, taking labs and lectures the same as the rest of you. (We also write the same examinations.) It requires a great deal of writing to fill those four pages for you to read on Tuesday and Friday mornings (when the Calculus becomes a bit too boring.) We need your help to fill this paper. Moreover, we want to make this a good paper, and one worth reading. The Varsity has always been a good paper and we feel a responsibility towards keeping it up to a high standard, though we believe that there are different conditions out at Ajax and therefore the paper may be modified to suit the different conditions. However, the fact that we are Engineering students is no reason why we cannot or should not turn out a paper worthy of the high standards of The University of Toronto.

It is a common fallacy that Engineers are merely technical men and that a low standard of literary ability is therefore to be expected from them. The Engineering profession, on the contrary is one that demands a high standard of written English. The Engineer must be able to think clearly, to organize his material and to express it in written form concisely. The man who will make his way in his chosen profession and to hold his own against the stiff competition of the world will be the man who can do these things.

As Engineering will make these demands upon our literary skill we should strive to develop this skill through practice. The Varsity offers a golden opportunity to obtain this practice. The writing of news, features, short stories, Champus Cats and even sporting or house activities provides practice in organizing material, and expressing it clearly and lucidly. No one better than the staff of your paper appreciates the value of Professor Wright's lectures in English.

On taking over the reins which "El" has laid down, we feel that a great responsibility has fallen upon our shoulders. With no great experience in the art of journalism we have had to carry on the traditions and maintain the high standards which the public at large expects from the student oragn of the University of Toronto. Moreover we feel ourself called upon to play an important part in the development of an Ajax spirit. We want to "put Ajax on the map" as it were, to make the University of Toronto feel proud of us, that their investment in Ajax was well worth the time and money spent on us. We want them to feel that they by providing for us this golden opportunity for bettering our education have made a lasting contribution to the progress and advancement of our country; That they have done something to turn out citizens who will be an asset to their country and a credit to themselves.

Milk!

J. J. BRIGHAM

Are you a hopper? Do you take part in the noontime pastime so dear to the hearts of a small but vociferous section of the student body? Do you aid the salvage drive by flattening your milk cartons before throwing them into the basket?

It is a commonly realized fact that by enclosing a gas in a vessel and applying a force, the increased pressure exerts a force, equally in all directions. This force if released suddenly, as by a rupture in any portion of the surrounding walls of the vessel, sets up vibrations in the atmosphere which, impinging on the eardrum, cause the phenomenon known as hearing. This scientific fact was discovered by Cro-magnon man in one million six B.C. and was rediscovered by a direct descendant in early 1946 A.D. The name of this benefactor of mankind must remain a secret until he or she files full patent rights.

The drumming of the ruffled grouse is done for reasons known only to the grouse. The theory has been advanced that the noise is a mating-call; other experts aver that the grouse is merely amusing himself and has no ulterior motive, or that it is a way to show off. Any one of these theories might apply also to the exploding of milk cartons, except for a few points which seem to eliminate two of them. The first is the readily admitted truth that the mating-call of the Engineer, in common with the unenlightened members of his kind, is a long-drawn howl. Secondly, Engineers are completely without conceit. That this will not be denied by our readers, we feel sure. Therefore, by a scientific process of elimination, we can deduce that the exploding of milk cartons is simply for self-amusement like many another pastime known to all.

So from time immemorial, the active brain of Man will continue to devise new methods whereby he can prove his superiority over the lesser orders of creation, and by means of which he will continue to annoy his neighbours. So all hail to the lowly container of milk whether inanimate or human!

Keep your friendships in constant repair.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Pete Philpott

During the past week sports have been taking second place to studying. The lads who romped about the gym a few weeks ago are now getting their exercise bending over books in the study rooms. However, as soon as the second term gets under way and the baseball diamonds are dry the sports editor can forget his aspirin tablets and enjoy the beautiful spring weather. He will no longer have to scratch his head wondering just where he can find material for his column.

The Bay of Quinte

The old salts of Residence 729 are planning this summer a cruise to The Bay of Quinte and beyond. There will be a crew of five and here they are: Jake Brightup in chemical, Dave Hamm thrashing out in M. and P., Gord Schmit and two others, (the owners who are remaining anonymous).

Jake Brightup has sailed the International Races for many years on Lake Ontario and has had plenty of experience. While sailing off Kingston three years ago Jake upset his International dinghy in a line squall and stayed with his boat for three hours. Gord served in the navy as a W.T. and expects to serve as a "ham" on the cruise. Dave Hamm is an old barnacle from the word go having raced and cruised all over the world.

Nights That Pass In Ships

The sail boat is a twenty-five foot 'C' boat called the Canuck. Aboard is enough room for two people to sleep amid sail bags stowed up forward, clothing strapped to the ceiling, and ice back aft, charts, food, and radios. The system to be used is that Gord (the ex-R.C.N.V.R.) will sleep in a hammock under the boom protected by a boom tent. Three hardy souls will sleep below in an inverted pyramid fashion, two suspended on either side of the ship and the third left to sleep comfortably? in the middle on the floor boards. Where the fifth will sleep I don't know.

The Bay of Quinte has been long known as one of the most beautiful sailing points on Lake Ontario. The water is so deep in some sections that a sail boat may draw along side of the shore so that the occupant can munch the berrys off the bushes. Fishing is not too bad and the swimming excellent.

The crew is now practising old sea ditties handed down through the ages. Among the favourites are 'The Good Ship Venus', 'Christopher Columbus' and 'The Old Monk'.

BASEBALLS are available up at the Athletic Office.

Inter Residence Basketball

Residence 722 trounced Residence 730 by a score of seventeen to fourteen last night in the Rec Hall for the right to enter play offs after Easter.

The first quarter was slow with Saxberg and Yamamoto scoring baskets for 730 and Dyer sinking a foul shot for 722.

The second quarter saw a game of rugby and a bit of basketball. Howes scores for 730 in opening moments of game. After playing with the ball in a game of rugby, Reeves scores for Residence 722. Saxberg retaliates for 730 to make score five to six for 730. Thirty seconds Yamamoto for 730 sinks a basket. The ball was bounced around the room and then Steinmiller scored for 722.

Dyer opened the third quarter by scoring for 722. MacDonald fires back for 730. Residence 722 pounded back up the floor to sink a ball by Dyer. After a period of motley playing Pirbeaux for 730 sinks a basket from Yamamoto making the score fourteen to eleven for 730. A break away by Whitehead of 722 brings two more points. Dyer scores for 722 after Pridaux shoots three unsuccessful foul shots against Dyer.

In the last two minutes 730 put up a heavy defense and in last three seconds Reeve scores for 722 to make the final score 722-B, seventeen, 730-B, fourteen.

Residence 725 defeated residence 729 in a hard fought battle of basketball in the Recreation Hall by a score of twenty-six to eleven.

The game opened with rough play and closed with rough play. 729 was hemmed in from the first throw of the ball although 725 did have a few breaks. 725 missed many sure shots which were not blocked by 729. The first quarter ended with no score but plenty of action.

The second quarter opened in the same heavy blocking and fast play. In the first few seconds of play Powell scored the first basket from Black and Young. 724 retaliated with Griffiths to tie the score. Young sank a basket on a foul shot against Shand for charging. In the next minute Erstefi fouls Griffiths, who got his basket. Bell, for 725 scored an easy shot with nobody around the basket. Irwin scored for 725 making the score at the end of half time seven to three for 725.

725 took the initiative in the second half. Every time 729 cleared the basket, 725 pounded right back in again. Griffiths scored for 725 after the ball danced around rim of basket. 729 finally broke out of the ring as Sid Young scored during a battle of flying feet and hands. After 725 held 729 back against their basket Pollard scored followed by Irwin for 725. Residence 729 then tried to break out of encircling players but their play was not co-ordinated and not enough checking. Sanson scored a basket during this mad break and was retaliated by Pollard of 725. Sanson again came back to sink the second basket in one minute.

Pollard for 725 opened the last quarter by sinking a foul shot against Taylor. Briar of 725 made another successful foul shot against T. ylor making the score nineteen to nine for 725. Gord Lang broke away from the hard hitting 725 boys to bring 729 score to eleven. Irwin sank a basket for 725 as he is fouled. He sank this foul shot making the score twenty-two to eleven for 725. In the last fifteen seconds of play Pollard shot a basket for 725 followed by Bell's winning sinker to make the final score 725, twenty-six, 729, eleven.

724 Beware

By ROSS AUSTIN

In an interview Thursday, "Ozark" Olsen, of 727, was confident of a quick victory in the semi-final round of the volleyball playoffs Saturday morning. In his own words "Those . . . why we would get better opposition from 721!" The boys were not completely satisfied with their showing last Saturday, so some of them have been getting in some practice on the side. Huhta and Roe have been practicing all week—running up and down the hallways bouncing empty milk containers back and forth to each other. They seem to be rounding into shape and on at least one occasion have given an exhibition in the common room with a full container. Result—whipped cream.

The winner of this game will enter the final round against either 730 or 737 at 1:30 p.m. Saturday to decide the championship. In an extemporaneous remark Homer Nathan pointed out "They won't stand much of a chance in the final if they lose in the semi-final."

that when he left the school there were quite a few people present, including the local sheriff, the town council, a large group of men with clubs and knives, and three arts men who gave their names as Dick Tracey, Pat Patton, and B. O. Plenty.

At this juncture his parents began to worry about his future. They tried to get him into the Army, then the Navy, then the Air Force, then even the CWAC, but all to no avail. At last they were struck by a brilliant thought—He would go to Ajax!

Damsels Beware . . .

Verily, I say unto ye, marry not an engineer:

For an engineer is a strange being and possessed of many evils.

Yea, he speaketh always in parables which he calleth formulae,

He wieldeth a big stick which he calleth a slide rule,

And he hath only one bible, a hand book.

He thinketh only of strains and stresses, and without end of thermodynamics.

He showeth always a serious aspect and seemeth not to know how to smile.

He picketh his seat in a car by the springs thereof and not by the damsels.

Neither does he know a waterfall except by its horsepower, nor a sunset except that he must turn on the light, nor a damsel except by her weight.

Always he carrieth his books with him, and he entertaineth his sweetheart with steam tables.

Verily, though his damsel expecteth chocolates when he calleth, she openeth the package to discover samples of iron ores.

Yea, he holdeth her hand but to measure the friction thereof, and kisseth her only to test the viscosity of her lips, for in his eyes there shineth a far away look that is neither love nor a longing look—rather a vain attempt to recall formulae.

Even as a boy he pulleth girl's hair but to test its elasticity; But as a man he deviseth different devices.

For he counteth the vibrations of her heartstrings

And seeketh ever to pursue his scientific investigations.

Even his own heart flutterings he counteth as a measure of fluctuation.

And he enscrubeth his passion as a formula,

And his marriage is a simultaneous equation involving two unknowns and yielding diverse results.

Verily, I say unto ye, marry not an engineer.

SOCIAL WORKER AS POET

Miriam Waddington's Green World (First Statement, $1.00) is third in the First Statement New Writers Series and, generally, maintains the standard of excellence set by Layton and Anderson.

From a social worker, we should expect something of a sociological approach. Fortunately, for the most part, we get only "something" of this. Only The Bond seems to strain the natural (?) benevolence of the poet to the point of an almost ridiculously self-conscious self-identification. Tapestry and Girls are duly maternal, and Who Will Build Jerusalem has some adequately deft touches of social satire.

With the psychic implications of social disorder, Waddington, as poet, is more at home. Portrait, Dog Days, The Sleepers are characterized by a pure masculine (Audenesque) vigor:

"The slow surge of cold hatred Flowing through secret passages
Under our tunnelled cities,
The murder without motive . . .

Blowing an ill wind
Over the sterile and severe avenues
Unflanked by flowers or such frippery."—(Portrait).

Integrating the book as a whole, and informing some of the best-integrated single poems, is a traditional, but highly intense, opposition of images: sun and green and water, and a sordid city walled against them:

"I know the tangle of hot streets behind the poorhouse Pouring from the city liked coiled intestines . . .

And the blinds drawn against the day and the feel of sun."
(Investigator).

In terms of the subjective microcosm, sea and green and water are love and city is walls of isolation:

"I send you the message of my odd love

Across a world in which love no longer matters . . .

In our separate worlds, strange ages, love is a sealed entity
Not transmittable and perplexing . . .
(Uncertainties).

—not transmittable, at any rate, in terms of sociological escape. To the world at large, Waddington admits, the social worker can only say:

"And I will answer with the round technique
That walls me from you."
(Sympathy).

In order to block further elaboration of what is possibly already too rigid (and superfluous) a pattern of interpretation, I add as a separate but not wholly unrelated observation, that the essential undertone of Waddington's book is a fusion of lyric and erotic elements. Without assuming a relationship of fixed causality between these two, I believe that it as a lyricist that Waddington is at her best. In the more clearly intellectual poems, eroticism rises up and out with something of the lyric bligness of Spender:

"And in her riotous garden
Seven fathoms beneath the world will bloom

Where the white curve of his nostril, the carved ear-lobe
Will blossom to permanent shapes, give form

To her huge longing, and she will spread herself

A sighing caress in the seagreen sunlight

Filtered through oceans of sorrow."
(The Sleepers).

But at other times one is refreshed to find poems of an almost pure erotic interest. When Waddington deserts the fashionable complexities of love, the result is erotic in a tender, fragile way which few have followed since the pre-experimental E. E. Cummings. Lullaby is exquisite. For it alone, Green World would be worth the having.

attitude, that everybody from the professors to the dames follow, either we take them or they leave us."

"Speaking of girls," said Laurie Sutherland, "they are nice and friendly from a distance. At first you see curves, but the nearer you get to them, the faster they melt and shrink away. I think that once I have picked out a girl and gone to work on her, the ice will disappear, and she'll be O.K."

"Bobby-sox, bobby-sox, everywhere in all colours, I heartily disapprove of them. Why do women wear them I don't know. They are unglamorous and besides, they don't keep them warm. They should wear heavy stockings and socks like mine," was the comment of Jack Ord.

"University life is fine but all that walking wears me out so that I never feel like going out any more," sighed Frank Cleaver. "Now look at all those cars. I never have seen so many 1946 Buicks all in a bunch. Those chaps must have some money besides the sixty bucks I get."

AJAX, ONTARIO

VARSITY EDITOR IN ATOMIC CASE

Special to the Varsity, Apr. 8.—It was announced late tonight that James Fydel, Editor of The Varsity, had been held for questioning by the Engineering Society in connection with Uranium U-239Z, which he is reported to have precipitated while performing a chemical analysis of an unknown solution in the Chemistry laboratory last Saturday morning.

It was not known at the time of going to press whether the R.C.M.P. were following the case.

"I have no idea how it got there," was Fydel's only comment after his release by the Engineering Society.

According to a usually reliable source, Fydel was seen early Saturday morning in the cafeteria, carrying a small bottle. When asked where he was going, he hurriedly explained that he had an experiment to complete in Group 20 solution.

Later when confronted with the evidence, Fydel is reported to have stated, "I am completely innocent. I would not know U-239Z from common toothpaste." According to Mr. Ben LeVarde, noted chemical instructor, U-239Z looks like toothpaste, "like Pepsodent, as a matter of fact."

Mr. Philip Kevill, physicist, told The Varsity that it would be almost impossible to prepare U-239Z accidentally. "The mathematical chances of such a thing occurring unintentionally are one in five billion."

Mr. Michael McAuliffe, President of the Engineering Society, when interviewed remarked, "The whole matter points out the need for a Chemical Club. Such a happening should be handled by the Chemical Club but we shall not have such an organization until next fall. In the meantime the Engineering Society will continue to conduct any necessary investigation."

At the present Fydel is allowed his freedom in order to try his examinations. It is believed, however, that he is under more or less close supervision.

Owen LeMyre, of The Varsity, remarked that "When a newspaper can expose its own editor-in-chief, it is a certain proof that we have freedom of the press."

Gord Beatty, in the same class as Fydel, said in his defense, "He is innocent. Fydel could not even find hydrogen sulphide. He doesn't know a precipitate from a test tube full of water. He simply could not find anything like that. He is just too dumb."

A chemistry demonstrator who does not want his name disclosed said, "There is enough U-239Z present in that test tube to blow up all

Engineering Alumni Visit

The Engineering Alumni Association paid a visit to Ajax on Friday afternoon to see for themselves what Ajax had to offer the student engineer.

The group consisted of twenty-six graduate engineers who toured the lecture and drafting rooms, Hart House, Reading room and Engineering Society set up.

Dr. Otto Holden summed up the opinion of the Alumni when he said "I'm very pleased with the arrangement. The facilities offered to the students are excellent." Dr. Holden went on to say that the fluorescent lighting in the drafting rooms was a great improvement over the lighting system used on the Queen's Park Campus. What impressed the Association, according to Dr. Holden, was the poor impression a visitor was given by his first look at the exterior of the buildings contrasted with the most favourable impression one received on entering the building. "Hart House is a typical example of this false impression" he said "I was most astounded on entering that building to see the magnificent arrangements that are available to the students. The cafeteria was part of the tour. Dr. Holden again

Burwash Hall Mystery Fire

Last Friday morning at 6:00 o'clock while residents were peacefully sleeping a fire of unknown origin broke out in the common room of Burwash Hall where a chesterfield and chesterfield chairs began blazing. The fire apparently started in the chair.

The night watchman reported that everything was in order when he made his round at a quarter to six.

Ted Poulter from Madoc was the first to smell the fire. He woke his room-mate Ralph Jones. The two slept in Room 19 which is on the second floor. Taping had been going on the night before and their door had been barricaded. The boys during the evening had kicked five out of six of the panels out of the door, which allowed the smoke to enter the rooms. The smoke awakened the boys and Jones woke Ed Kirkland, the Don, while Poulter broke the glass of the fire alarm on the landing between the first and second floors.

Within 4 minutes the Fire Department responded to the fire alarm and 6 fire trucks were on the scene. Two or three of the trucks that arrived were ladder carriers. Meanwhile Dave Preston, Arn Reilly and John Morrison had scrambled for the nearest fire extinguisher and practically put out the blaze unaided by any outside help. The Toronto Daily Star were notified of conflagration by George Forster who personally contacted the editor for news. Ralph Forbes, photographer for the Varsity City Division, was one of the first to notice the smoke. The streets were brightened by men in colourful pyjamas as they stood shivering in the cold night air. When the firemen entered the building they were disappointed at not finding any girls present.

The damage was estimated at $125.00 but this is covered by insurance and repair of the damaged part of the building was under way immediately. It was quick thinking of several students that saved the valuable residence and allowed students to return to their rooms and attempt to sleep for the remainder of the night.

Taping is a custom observed in college dormitories. The junior men-day visits to the senior men during the early morning hours for the purpose of treating the seniors to a bath.

Church Service

A group of about forty persons consisting mostly of students and including some ladies from the community attended the regular Sunday morning church service in the Music Room of Hart House.

The Rev. Swan, Hart House Chaplain conducted the service.

The notes of Handel's "Largo" and "Now Thank We All Our God" played from recordings made by G. Mathew Ball on the organ of Temple Church London, opened the service. Another recording, "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" (Bach) sung by the Choristers of Temple Church provided the anthem music.

Rev. Swan spoke on "The Creative Factor in The Human Soul" stated that in our easy way of living today from mechanical inventions and with forms of amusement provided today, we are in danger of becoming like mere vegetables, but that we had within us the power to raise ourselves above such a plane of life. He also brought out that in humans there were certain forces like ambition, love, which we might use well and raise our-

ENGINEERS DANCE AS EXAMS LOOM

Hart House Record Hour

A small group of music lovers listened to a varied programme of classical recordings in the music room at Hart House on Sunday evening. Mr. Ben LeVarde arranged the programme which lasted from 8.10 p.m. until about 10.00 p.m.

The programme consisted of both vocal and orchestral recordings, Ave Maria (Schubert) sung by Marian Anderson, contralto, the Coriolan Overture (Beethoven) played by the BBC Symphony Orchestra and Beethoven's No. 5 Symphony in C-Minor played by the NBC Symphony Orchestra were the outstanding numbers of the evening.

Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C-Sharp played by the pianist concluded the programme.

Jitterbugging Contest Is Impromptu Feature

On Saturday evening the Hart House Dance Committee organized the last and most successful dance on the campus for the first term. The committee which has organized the Saturday night dances has been led by Jim Van and Morley Horton. There are seven others on the committee all of whom have contributed to this last social function of the term.

The Recreation Hall was crowded with nearly 600 enthusiastic dance fans who enjoyed the music of Miller, Shaw and Dorsey as they glided around the floor. This was the largest student dance held on the campus so far. Four buses brought the girls from the Toronto campus and numerous taxis transported girls from Oshawa, Whitby and Pickering. Many girls from the local village were also present and for the first time since the Saturday night dances started there were enough girls for all the fellows.

While studying was the most important thing last week-end many of the students who were here closed their books at about 8 p.m. and headed for the dance. They soon relaxed their weary minds and began cutting rugs. The girls from the city also had weary minds and they have good reason, for they are writing their finals in three weeks. As the evening went on little would one suspect the tension under which the students were. There were several exhibitions of jitterbugging and among the best noticed were Bert Bethune and his partner, Helen Polak on one occasion.

On observing these exhibitions, the leader of the dance committee, Jim Van decided to hold a Jitterbug Contest. When the crowd cleared the way for the jitterbugs it was found that not many couples were interested in entering the contest. It finally got under way and the judges picked Joan Roseau and Moe Klein for first, and Audrey Durston and Norm Byrne for second. When questioned later about why he didn't enter, Bert Bethune said that he would like to dance with a girl for a considerable time before he was at his best. On interviewing many of the girls present it was found that they enjoyed themselves very much but they wondered why some of the fellows who apparently came to dance stood around holding the walls up.

At half time there was intermission and the snack bar was open a little later than usual. Many of the guests of the evening spent the short interval observing the art exhibit in the Hart House common room and showed marked interest. Large queues formed in the snack bar and the place was jammed for nearly a half hour. Since it was the first time many of the girls have been out here they were amazed to find Ajax equipped with so many comforts of the city. The music went on for those who wanted to continue dancing, but most couples paid a visit to the Tuck shop.

During the evening Gord Broomhall took several pictures from various angles of the stage. The committee tried out several new records, one of which was a special, Paul Jones. It is expected there will be bigger and better Saturday night dances after the holidays when things are back to normal.

The nurses from the Oshawa General Hospital said that they had a pleasant time. Boss Snowden said: "It is really wonderful here and the boys have treated us well." There was also good word from Helen Erickson and Jean Jackson. Leeds Richardson said, "Sally and I are having a wonderful time." It was

Death Ends Noted Career Professor James T. King

On Sunday at his home on Manor Road death came to Professor James Thomas King, after a long period of ill-health.

Professor King came to the staff of the Department of Mining in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering in 1911.

During his 36 years as a member of the staff, Professor King had done a considerable amount of research in Assaying and had made no small contribution to the mining industry in Canada through his work. He had written several papers which had earned him much commendation from his colleagues.

In his younger days, the deceased was an ardent football or soccer fan and in his later days was a keen bowler and curler; he belonged to the Toronto Curling Club.

Professor King took an interest in professional affairs and belonged to the Association of Professional Engineers and the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy. He was also a Mason.

He was born in Cooksville, Peel County and graduated from S.P.S. in 1911.

Ill-health forced him to discontinue his teaching duties during the past term.

Beside his widow, Mrs. Edith Mary King, he is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Kelvin Edmison and two sons James and John, both graduates of the university.

Money For Easter D.V.A. Comes Thru

D.V.A. have made special arrangements to pay maintenance grant cheques for the period of March 15-April 15 prior to the Easter Holidays. Those students who are under D.V.A. need not worry about being short of funds for the first few days of their break. Don't forget you will have your fourth residence installment due shortly after you come back.

As usual ex-service students who are living in residence will be paid sometime Thursday evening or on Friday April 12 by the housemasters. Non-resident students may receive their maintenance grant cheques at the bursars office between noon and 2 p.m.

Friday Night About The Campus

Over the week-end fewer students left the campus but it was not their choice to remain here. There were many who had to finish their GROUP III UNKNOWN. The fact that they did finish THEIR analysis of it does not mean that it still wasn't an unknown by noon Saturday. It is strange now some fellows find four or five metals in the ionic state in an analysis of distilled water. Oh, don't worry, you probably had cadmium, arsenic, lead, aluminium, bronze (now did that get in there) and cobalt, or did you? You're sure of yours, aren't you? Let's see, was it manganese or aluminium, the whitish precipitate that turned brownish? What does it matter now, you'll be doing quantitative next term if you're still here. Might as well go over to the dance at the recreation hall if you can spare the thirty-five cents. On second thought, better go to bed if I want to get that unknown done right on this my third attempt.

Examinations

As examination time comes to us at Ajax, with its atmosphere of tension and anxiety, we may take whatever comfort we can in that we are not alone in this atmosphere of strain. Other students also share this same feeling; students at Toronto, students in other Canadian universities from Dalhousie to Ubyssy, students in thousands of American colleges and universities, and lastly students all over the world in far-off countries are experiencing the same tense feelings. Furthermore, we of this age are not alone, for throughout the history of education the end of the year has been haunted by the spectre of the examination. From the elementary school to the university we have been confronted by periods of testing. Even beyond the academic world, the examination system has cast its sombre shadow as in the civil service system of Canada, Great Britain and other countries, where it has provided a basis of promotion for the employees. The system is indeed universal.

In these days, however, a bitter controversy concerning the value of examinations is raging. Many and bitter are the critics who are found not only among students and parents but among professors and savants as well, and loud is their denunciation.

Not only have examinations imposed unnecessary nervous strain upon the students but they have failed to measure a student's real knowledge of the subject; they have failed to measure his appreciation of the subject as no examination can indicate how much a student of English has enjoyed one of Shakespeare's plays or Milton's "Paradise Lost". What they do measure is perhaps the extent to which a student has sat up nights, his head wrapped in wet towels, pouring over books, cramming into his head a number of formulas which were never learned and which will be promptly forgotten, once he has written his subject. Moreover, the student who has acquired some knowledge of the subject may become so nervous and flustered when he enters the examination room or reads over the question paper or discovers that his time is short, or that he has misinterpreted some question, that he is unable to think clearly and thereby "flunks" his subject. The nervous strain of the examination inhibits the student's powers of analytic reasoning required in so many university examinations. Lastly the critics claim that examiners do not always agree on what is required of the student and there is the classic story of the professor in composition who after setting the paper, drafted out what he considered was a model answer. However the model answer paper became mixed up with the students' answer papers and when the paper was located it had been found that one of the examiners had marked it as one of the students and had failed the professor. Cases upon cases have been quoted by the critics to support their contentions and they are no doubt true. The system falls far short of being ideal.

On the other hand however, it must be admitted that however imperfect it may be, examinations do provide a scale for grading students. Attempts have been made to improve the validity of tests by making them less subjective and more objective in type. There is also the value of the motivating force of an examination. While "learning for the sake of knowledge" may be always true for the "ideal human being" who just does not exist, there are times when that "thirst for knowledge" seems to be quenched and it is difficult to put forth that effort to learn. Psychologists in their study of the "learning curve" have found this to be true. They have also discovered that by providing some artificial motivation such as examinations, the student can be stimulated to put forth greater effort. In many schools where tests are not required in certain subjects, it has been found that these subjects are often neglected in studying, there being no practical need for spending time on preparing them.

Finally, we are living in a world of keen competition and one in which we are continually being tested. We are judged by the way in which we solve the problems which confront us. Often we are called upon to solve problems in a short space of time. It is in this respect that examinations do have a parallel to the outside world and their value lies in the training they provide us. A lawyer preparing his brief for court, an engineer preparing a report to present at a Directors' meeting, must put forth the same effort as he did in his student days when he sat up nights to "cram". This time his whole career may be at stake. The most successful candidate is the one who can maintain his composure as is often the case in everyday life. We have somewhat of a parallel in military training where "live rounds" are used in military manoeuvres to accustom the soldier to battle conditions, which are to his own safety and success.

Little Red Hooding Ride

One fine spring Friday afternoon, after the last Calculus lecture for the week, Little Red Riding Hood started out, suitcase in her hand, to where the big grey bus was waiting to take her to the big city, a long, long way away. As she walked along the road, a big bad Wolf pulled up beside her in his shiny big new car. He said in his softest and most unwoolflike voice, "Would you like a ride to the city, Little Red Riding Hood?"

Now Little Red Riding Hood had been at Ajax for so long she thought she knew all there was to know about wolves (you see there were 1,392 of them at Ajax). So she was not in the least bit afraid. She thought, "Surely, I can look after myself. Mother taught me all about the birds and the bees."

She climbed into the front seat (it was a roadster and did not have a back seat) beside the Wolf and off they started down the road in the shiny big new car. After a time L.R.R.H. started to grow sleepy. Try as she could, she could not keep her eyes open. It was just like in Electricity classes where the lecturer droned on and on about E's and R's. Her head began to nod and then . . . it dropped and nestled on the shoulder of the big BAD WOLF. Suddenly L.R.R.H. dreamed that mice were running up her legs. She awoke with a start. She screamed. There was the Wolf holding her tight in his grip. A hungry gleam shone from his eyes. His mouth was slowly coming closer and closer. She could feel the panting of his hot breath. She screamed again. "Help!" "Help!" "Don't!" "Stop!" "Let me go!" "You big brute, you!" all in one breath. The car had stopped alongside the road. She struggled. She kicked. She bit. She tore. She slapped. She pounded. All at once she got the car door open. Suddenly she found herself out on the road. She managed to pick herself up, a dishevelled mass of humanity. She started down the road. It was dark. She was all alone out on the road and it was night. She began to wonder how she would ever get into the big city. Great sobs shook her. "Whatever will I do?" she cried.

Then down the road behind her shone two yellowish dim lights. With a roar a big long object pulled up beside her and stopped. A cry of joy went up from her lips. IT WAS THE GREEN HORNET.

Symphony Pop Concert

The last concert of the season by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra with Sir Ernest MacMillan conducting, was heard at Massey Hall in Toronto Friday evening, April 5. Regina Resnik, Metropolitan Opera Dramatic Soprano was guest artist for the evening.

The concert was well-chosen with "A Medley of Sea Chanties" arranged by Sir Ernest MacMillan being most appreciated. Regina Resnik, soprano, gave excellent renditions of "Ritorna Vincitor" (Return as Conqueror) from "Aida" by Verdi and "One Fine Day" from "Madame Butterfly" by Puccini. One of her encores, a Strauss waltz, was also well sung. The first concert performance in Canada of "I Have a Vision" written by Navy Lieutenant Kent while at sea and arranged by Torch a British arranger was very much applauded. The Symphony in D, No. 35 "The Haffner" by Mozart was a little weak in a few parts but on the whole it was played fairly well. The "Suite de Ballet" written by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra's Librarian, Louis Walzman was well received by the audience. One of the encores played by the T.S.O. to end the concert was "Land of Hope and Glory" which was a favorite with the audience.

Record Recital

For the small group of classical music lovers present in the Music Room of Hart House, Sunday evening at 8:10 p.m., Mr. Ben LeVardie arranged a very enjoyable Record Hour.

Ave Maria (Schubert) sung by Marian Anderson, contralto, the Coriolan Overture (Beethoven) played by the B.B.C. Symphony Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 in C-Minor (Beethoven) played by the N.B.C. Symphony Orchestra were the outstanding numbers of the evening.

The Aufenthalt (Schubert) was a little loud for the program arranged. The Trio No. 1 in B-flat Major (Schubert) played by Rubinstein, piano; Heifetz, violin, and Feuermann, cello, and the Russian and Ludmilla Overture (Glinka) were pleasing numbers. The final selections Prelude in C-sharp Minor (Rachmaninoff) and Spring Song (Mendelssohn) were played by Rachmaninoff, pianist.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Pete Philpott

As the Indian sailor said to the Mermaid, "How?" and as this is a sports' column this brings up the interesting subject of fishing. As there is no place to fish at Ajax we are left with the interesting topic of Mermaids. Rumour has it that there are no mermaids inhabiting our muddy streams so with your permission I'll talk about the sport of dancing.

Last Saturday evening engineers put into practice what they have learned during the last four months.

There are a number of types of girls which are classified by engineers as follows: The Electrical, The Analytical, The Static Girl and the Dynamic Wench.

The Electrical type conforms with electrical formulae. Her power equals volts times current. This is not as complicated as it sounds. POWER equals rate of doing work. POTENTIAL DIFFERENCE IN VOLTS equals work done between any two points. CURRENT is rate of flow of electricity or the charge. As power equals E squared over R, Resistance must be kept at a minimum to give a maximum power output.

The laws of Analytical Geometry likewise deal with the Analytical Girl. The engineering sportsman has to approach these curvy numbers with care for many is the unhappy student who has been caught on his partner's asymptote. This type of girl is further classified into sub-groups such as the TWO POINT FORM which is Y-b divided by X-a equals b-c divided by a-d where Y, b, and c are different measurements on the Y axis and X, a and d are measurements of the width. Further classes are the SLOPE AND POINT FORM determined from Y-b equals m(X-a). 'm' is the slope of the left ear-lobe in respect to the head. Y equals (mX plus b), is the slope and Intercept Form, and is determined to find the best angle of dancing to produce the best results.

The subject of statics deals with still life and in "Eshbach" is a sub-title of Theoretical Mechanics. The Static Girl is most interested in MOMENTS and COUPLES and so is a very interesting specimen. The nature of couples is as follows. Two forces which are equal and parallel and of opposite sense are termed a couple. The application of a second couple is applied to prevent the rotation of the body. The arm of the couple is the perpendicular distance between the lines of action of the forces. When analysing the Statics Girl, don't forget that the resultant of any numbers of couples in parallel is one couple. It is advisable that an engineer should not pinch a Statics Girl for she abides by her (Great) times 10 to the 76 power Grandfather-twice-removed-on-her-second-cousins-half-sisters-side Newton. Here the old goat stated in his Third Law—"To every action there is opposed an equal and opposite reaction."

Among the most popular girls at the dance was the Dynamics Girl. With this girl you can always tell how far you can go by the formula S equal UT plus AT (squared) divided by 2 where 'S' is the distance how far. 'A' designates the acceleration of her heart beats per second and 'T' is the time in which you have to work. For Engineers at Ajax this should save beaucoup de moola on needless soft drinks.

Apologies for this sports column are humbly offered but with no sports and an exam tomorrow, what do you expect?

Could Write Examinations But Barred From Classes To Avoid "Excitement"

For students of the present generation it is sometimes difficult to believe that a little over a half-century ago there were no women at the university. Not until February, 1885, did a woman student enter these academic halls as an undergraduate in regular attendance for it was felt that the dangers implicit for each sex were far too great.

Co-education, in the opinion of one principal, "would add other excitements to that attendant on the pursuit of knowledge."

The story of the struggle for co-education, and the arguments advanced on each side, can only be regarded as extremely humorous by modern students in a university whose halls and lecture-rooms are populated by almost three thousand women undergraduates, and where women share in student government equally with men.

Women Demand Admission

In the late 1870's the demand for increased facilities for the higher education of women was becoming more and more vociferous throughout the province. Earlier women had been admitted to examinations but they had not been allowed to take courses of instruction at the university. In 1877 the Senate of the university had established the Local Examinations for Women which were actually matriculation examinations. Many women were passing these examinations, although they could not come on to university, and in 1879 a young lady from Hamilton Collegiate Institute greatly embarrassed all concerned by winning the matriculation scholarship in Modern Languages. She was, of course, unable to hold it due to regulations. In 1881, however, a resolution was passed throwing scholarship competition open to women, regardless of attendance.

Applications for admission of women to University College as undergraduates were becoming more numerous until in March, 1884, the Provincial Legislature passed a resolution which is vitally important in the history of co-education and which served to bring the whole matter into the public light. It read: "Inasmuch as the Senate of the Provincial University have for several years admitted women to the University examinations and class lists, and inasmuch as a considerable number of women have availed themselves of the privilege, but labour under the disadvantage of not having access to any institution which affords the tuition needful for the higher years of the course; in the opinion of this House, provision should be made for the admission of women into University College."

How About It?

An open letter from the Varsity staff to the student body—

It is fully realized by the staff of this, your paper, that studying is necessary. This is especially true around examination time. But the Varsity is, or should be, important also. The paper means a lot to us and we have been given to understand that it means a lot to you as well. Ajax has been turning out its own publication for a very short time. In that time we have attempted to make it a paper fully representative of Ajax and to interpret Ajax to such of the outside world that still sees the Varsity as well as to keep you informed on happenings of interest.

There is a lot of work to turning out a paper. If that work were divided among a large number of students it would not take long. But for the last few weeks, the staff has been comprised of seven students. This is not, we believe, due to encephalitis on the part of the staff, but to inability to obtain aid. Seven men have reported, done research when necessary, edited and made up the paper. If in an attempt to squeeze in a little studying, we have not turned out a new paper up to the regular standard, we hope that you will bear with us. We have tried.

KNOW YOUR UNIVERSITY

Do you know that when Ajax was converted from a munitions plant to a university that work was not begun until October; that in many of what are now classrooms the floors had to be relaid because the old floors had become contaminated with the explosives?

Do you know that the heating system had to be changed from fan system to steam radiators? That the old blower system was too noisy for use in classrooms.

Voodoo

J. F. FYDELL

The time is midnight. The scene is in a room in one of the residences (as far as we know only men's). The floor is piled deep with butts. A single forty-watt bulb (that is a bulb through which a current of four elevenths of an ampere is flowing) sheds its sickly radiance (more amperes, more radiance) about the room and makes a last feeble stand against the deep heavy shadows. Through the dense clouds of cigarette smoke one can see on the walls the form of a delicately tinted Varga or the more richly hued Petty girl whose sleek lines and colourful figure provide the only cheerful note to the whole sombre setting.

Peering through the deep blue shadows we can make out a number of human forms squatting or sitting on the bed or upon what were at one time chairs. Perhaps they are students; maybe they are engineers. On the table one can barely distinguish the dim outlines of a tall object resembling a bottle (containing no doubt some strange potion used in the mysterious rites which take place from time to time amid this cult.)

From the low rumbling of talk, varied occasionally by a squeal of delight or exclamation of surprise and from the rattle of two small cubes and strange incomprehensible remarks and exclamations one gathers that a "session" is going on.

The objects of this mysterious cult are obscure. It is believed by some authorities that the orgies had their origin back in jungle Africa amid Voodoo. Indeed the two small cubes are sometimes termed "African dominoes" which confirms such an hypothesis. Moreover such authorities claim that the phrases used in these rites including such as "Snake Eyes", "Come on there, honey, come on, get hot!", and "Roll seven" are those used to invoke "spirits of African deities."

Others on the other hand believe that the object is purely scientific and that these persons are industriously engaged in research. The object being to determine the centre of gravity of the two cubes employed. They base their claims on the fact that each of the six faces of the cube bears a distinctive marking. However, due to the uniform distribution of the mass of the cube its centre of gravity has not yet been determined despite the long hours of painstaking research. Still there are some cubes whose centre of gravity have been determined after a few rolls, but as these have been located so easily they have no interest for the purely scientific spirit and are generally ruled out.

Observers report that whatever the motives behind these activities may be, the meetings of this strange cult often go far into the night. Some cases have been known where they have lasted all night until daylight. Such cases moreover have been found to be more common at the beginning of the month or in some cases at the middle of the month. Whatever be the causes, it has been definitely established that these protracted meetings have a definite cyclic period. The moon which has been blamed for many things seems to have no relation upon the activities of this strange and mysterious cult.

Whatever be the solution of the mystery, it has been proved to have a strange fascination and the field offers much scope for investigation.

Historical Documents Given to University

In a letter to The Varsity President Sidney Smith announced that the University of Toronto has accepted with gratitude a valuable gift from Mr. R. S. McLaughlin, of Oshawa.

The gift consists of the Simcoe papers, including the diary kept by Mrs. Simcoe, wife of the first Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, Lieutenant General John Graves Simcoe, whose original idea it was to establish the University of Toronto.

Governor Simcoe played a prominent part in the development of Ontario or Upper Canada as it was then known, through his road construction programme. It was at this time that Toronto (then York) and London were linked by means of the Dundas Highway or Dundas Street, as it was then called. The construction of the Yonge Street Highway also took place at this time.

It was under his regime also that the Danforth Street which later became No. 2 Highway was begun. This was for the purpose of linking York and Kingston and became known as the "Kingston Road."

The engineer in charge of the work was Asa Danforth, whose name is commemorated in Danforth Avenue.

In an interview by telephone, Mr. W. S. Wallace, Librarian of the University Library, stated that the gift consisted of three boxes of manuscript and maps as well as material relating to his later life. Much of the matter relating to his earlier life has already been published.

Of possible interest to engineers are the early charts and maps drawn by the surveyors under him and which include an early sketch of Toronto Harbour.

Included in Mrs. Simcoe's Diary are many pictures of historical value as well as some volumes of correspondence.

Mr. R. S. McLaughlin, Chairman of the Board of Directors of General Motors, Oshawa, through whose generosity the presentation was made, purchased this collection from representatives of the Simcoe family and presented it to the University quite recently.

The material has been delivered to the University of Toronto Library where it will be used by the staff of the Department of History and by graduate students.

President Smith stated that this gift will be of great benefit to the staff and students of the University, and particularly to those who work in the field of the early history of the province.

Dental Care For Veterans

Because a large number of ex-service students lack information regarding the procedure to follow in procuring dental treatment, the Advisory Bureau For Ex-service Students provides the following guide regarding eligibility for dental care.

If you have dental work recommended at the time of discharge, have applied for this treatment, but have not yet received authorization, you may go to any private dentist who wish for any emergency work which may exist; that is, any condition which causes you pain, any serious gum condition, or repair to a broken denture. Provided only strictly urgent work is done

A Message From The Director

The Editor of The Varsity has given me this opportunity to offer a few comments at the end of the first term of the first session at Ajax. The challenge that confronted students and staff last January has been met—the Ajax Division is a reality.

Examinations have just been completed and I am confident that the results will demonstrate that academic work has taken first place in the minds of all students. At the same time, a true University spirit has been developed—happily within the Faculty of Applied Science and the University as a whole—the Ajax Division is now an integral part of our great University.

Visitors from other Universities have shown a keen interest in all that has been achieved at Ajax in such a short space of time.

Students are at the half way mark in their first year and with the continued co-operation between students and staff there is no doubt that the second term results will surpass those of the first term.

HOUSES DRENCHED IN STUDENT WAR

Fire Department Called To End Hose Battle

(By The Varsity War Correspondent)

Last night, on the last night of the first term, the residents of 734 and 736 waged war across the open field between the two buildings. Using fire hoses as weapons, the participants fought for every inch of ground in the largest battle yet witnessed on the campus.

The evening started quietly until the residents of 734 discovered that the locks on most of the doors had been tampered with, rendering them useless. A small party set out to reconnoitre and the situation became worse. A fire hose was passed through the ventilator in the roof of 734 and the floor of the hall was soon deep in water.

In retaliation, hoses were run out into the field between houses and hand to hand combat was commenced. A few windows were broken and the rooms flooded. After a fierce and lengthy battle 734 gained control for a time until the main hydrants along Queen's Road were brought into play. The additional power of the heavier hoses drove the field of hand to hand combat toward the lower end of the ground until by an encircling manoeuvre the two armies met again along the road.

The strongly contested fight tended to wane until reinforcements came to the aid of both sides and the contestants grappled over the heavy hose. This struggle was in two parts—one over the nozzle of the hose and the other for the control sector at the valve of the hydrant.

Yells and commands rent the air as the chiefs-of-staff for both sides gave orders from the thick of the fray. The big hose cut the pressure on the small house hoses until they were almost useless and the war centred on command of the large sprinkler.

The short hoses were coupled together to increase their range and were the centres of smaller battles in attempts to disconnect the individual sections. The field was a panorama of small struggles connected together by the unifying power of the heavy hose and by the commands of the generals who stepped into the position of control which were so obviously lacking in the earlier stages.

Many of the warriors removed all outer clothing during the earlier periods of the scrimmage and were dressed in shorts. Others preferred Army and Air Force fatigue clothes. The opposing armies were indistinguishable in the general melee except for the direction in which they attempted to turn the hoses.

As things quieted down, and the participants prepared to clean up the delapidation, the campus fire department arrived and began to straighten up the fire fighting equipment. While they inspected the damage to windows, woodwork and hoses, the firemen hals and the ignition keys were removed from the truck to add to the general disorganization.

But the back of the battle had been broken or rather had collapsed from weariness. The clamour died down and the tired, wet and foot-sore combatants went back to the study of statics.

Transportation

Buses will leave for Toronto from the bus stop in back of York Hall on Friday, April 12.

1:00 p.m., 2:00 p.m., 3:00 p.m., 4:15 p.m., and 6:15 p.m. Buses will leave for Ajax from the Toronto terminus between 10:00 p.m. and 11:00 p.m. on Monday, April 22.

The first section of the special Easter train leaves Ajax for Toronto at 2:00 p.m. The second section also for Toronto, leaves at 4:45. Both sections will leave from the siding on the main line, east of the Ajax Road.

The train will leave Union Station for Ajax on Monday, April 22, at 10:45 p.m.

LIBRARY OPEN

Those staying at Ajax over the Easter holiday should take note that the Circulating Library in 742 will be open two hours a day (from 4:00 P.M. to 6 P.M.) except for the period from Good Friday to Easter Monday.

West Area Residences

Fourteen additional residences will be available for student accommodation during the coming session. Four of this number, at the east end of Queens Road have never been used, and have only recently been completed and decorated by the University. They are first class buildings and are but a short sprint from the Cafeteria.

In the West Area the University has completely renovated and redecorated ten buildings, and made them look like small editions of the East Residences. Each will accommodate fifty-four students and will contain Study Rooms, Kitchens, Phone Booths and other facilities. The bedrooms are approximately the same size as in the other buildings and will be furnished in a similar manner.

The main difference between the East and the West Residences is the outward appearance of the latter—the tell-tale tar paper finish. But to offset this (and who cares what they look like on the outside) the buildings are well located with reference to the main area, parking lot and recreation facilities. Students who are assigned to these residences will have every advantage that those in the East Area now enjoy.

ENQUIRY BOARD FOR ATOMIC CASE

(By J. J. BRIGHAM)

Special to The Varsity, April 11.—It was announced late tonight that a special commission has been appointed to further the investigation into the Ajax Atomic case.

Mr. Michael J. McAuliffe, President of the Engineering Society, in making the announcement of the commission said, "We have hopes of closing the case in the next few weeks."

At the time of going to press, J. F. Fydel was still at liberty in order to be able to continue his examinations. However, according to a well substantiated rumor from a usually well informed source which can not be disclosed, Fydel will be taken into custody over the Easter vacation.

Many persons about the campus have expressed amazement at the fact that Fydel was able to continue his experiments for so long without being apprehended. Mr. Bruce Neilson, chemist, commented, "Surely something is wrong when, at a time when everyone is well versed in the methods of spies and espionage agents, such an occurrence can take place in such a busy community."

"No one, least of all Jim, knew what was in that test tube," said Mr. Gordon Beatty, speaking in Fydel's defense.

Meanwhile the test tube, containing the dangerous and mysterious Uranium U-239Z, rests in the vault in an undisclosed and enclosed part of the Academic Area. Dr. P. Episcopo, Professor of Fyzes, after examining the sample, said, "There is no doubt in my mind that this is the greatest scientific discovery that has taken place since the transmutation of gold into mercury. The isolation of U-239Z makes obsolete all previous chemistry since Boyle."

Research in The Varsity files has failed to bring to light anything which would indicate that Fydel had ever previously been involved in anything of a like nature. Aside from a natural brilliance in chemistry, there is nothing in his past to denote any such ability as is necessary for the isolation of a new element. However, Fydel continues to assert that the entire experiment was an accident, as are many others that take place in the laboratory.

It is surprising that, up to now, the identity of any accomplices has not been uncovered. But it is rumored that Fydel was seen often last week in a local roadhouse, seated at a table almost completely covered with empty bottles. When approached he merely said, "No thanks, not tonight." This has led to the belief that he had a rendezvous with a confederate. The authorities have been questioning the

CHURCH SERVICES DURING HOLIDAYS

On Palm Sunday, April 14th, the Chaplain will celebrate Holy Communion in his study (House 724, Room 1) at 8:30 a.m. That will be the only service on that day.

On Easter Sunday there will not be any services on the campus. It is assumed that any students who are staying over will prefer to attend full Easter Services in nearby churches. Some suggestions follow: Interdenominational Church, Ajax Village.

All the main denominations are represented in Pickering, Whitby and Oshawa. At Whitby the bus stops in front of All Saints' Anglican Church, and the other churches are close by. In Oshawa both the first and second traffic lights are near some very fine churches.

There will be celebrations of Holy Communion during Easter Week (the first week of the new term) at times which will be announced on the Bulletin Board in Hart House. If the Chapel is near enough to completion, they will be held there. If not, the place will be specified on the announcement.

ALIS IN AJAXLAND

At the close of Joe's last dose of prose, our hero, Alistair Bannister had finished high school subversively, and was preparing to enter the University of Toronto, Ajax division. Following the advice of his uncle, who was graduate in quantitative chemistry (As a graduate he could hold up to 26 ounces without precipitation), he went down to the little building between St. George Street and Summer Vacation Hall, and demanded to see his zoner, I. M., "Conical" Funnell, the great white chief in charge of reforestation, or something like that.

The girl at the desk said to him "With whom do you wish to speak?" and Alis answered back coyly, "Now, I don't wanna speak to Whom, I wanna speak to the magistrate, or whoever he is."

The girl answered back quickly "Oh, but you can't, Mr. Funnell is smoking." Alis, not dismayed, came right back with "Oh, that's all right I'll wait. It's a lucky strike that you have a chesterfield for me to sit on." This was too much for the poor girl and she collapsed on a pile of D V A cheques which were ominously nailed to the counter.

At this juncture Soapreffer entered the hall with a long trail of attendance, spewing liquid helium from the floor to the ceiling. He rushed up to Alis, seized his bag of peanuts, chucked half of them into the liquid neon, and shouted fiendishly "Guess what! Peanut Brittle!"

Nothing daunted by this performance, he strode into the inert sum-tank, and was immediately awed by the presence of his zoner, showing the office boy how to do "Around the world on his yo-yo."

Just then the string broke, and the yo-yo struck Alis full in the mouth, travelling at a speed of nearly MKS units.

Taking in the situation at a mouthful, he found he had nothing to say, for once, and relegated himself to rolling around on the floor making loud gurgling noises. The situation was relieved when three med men (They go around in groups of three for safety's sake) burst in the door.

First they took his temperature. Then they took his pulse. Then they took his watch. Then they got his goat. Then he gave them a piece of his mind after first getting rid of the yo-yo, which, as it rolled out the door, turned casually and retorted in a loud, clear voice, "Cheerio!"

The smoke of battle having been thus cleared away the magistrate opened the conversation. You have your ma tricolour certificate, I take it?" Alis replied evasively, "Youse ain't takin' nothin' of mine", and brandished a long knife with "Boiled Pork Hotel" stamped on the handle.

At this the registrate could see that he was getting nowhere. He thrust pen, ink and blank forms at young Alistair.

What will Alis write? Will the ink work in the pen? Will Alistair's old man work in the pen? Will Alis get away? Will Funnell catch the drip? Will the drip make the grind at Ajax? That's a joke son, in case you don't drink, (Coffees, that is.) Will the third instalment ever appear in the Varsity? Read the Wednesday Evening Post and "keep posted".

Contemporary... Review

The scarcity of Penguin and Pelican books has constituted one of the far from minor tragedies brought by the war. American and Canadian publishers of similar cheap pocket-size books have eagerly flooded the market with reprints of detective stories and second-rate best-sellers; make-up of these books has been poor and gaudy; the occasional intelligent selection has looked as out of place as choir boys at a burlesque show.

The Penguins and Pelicans have been a different matter. Inside chaste covers is hidden both intelligent writing and neat unpretentious make-up. The editors of these series has never been afraid to attack such social problems as antisemitism; they have placed Virginia Woolf beside D. H. Lawrence, collections of Canadian writing and even reports of parliamentary debates. Penguin sales prove that good literature can exert a mass-appeal without entering the fatal gardens of popularization and high-pressure advertising. And this is a talking point—admittedly a meagre one, but somehow strangely heartening because it is for those interested in a true and intelligent peoples' literature.

These reflections are the result of reading The Penguin New Writing, No. 26. With the companion Penguin Parade this series constitutes one of the most interesting, if not always most successful, of the numerous Penguin experiments. New writing has been capably and intelligently edited by John Lehmann, who has made it a forum for the younger writers of Europe and the British Dominions, as well as for the sometimes neglected authors of the British Isles.

In the present issue are a number of poems of varying merit, including one by the Canadian Earle Birney and another by a nine year old girl. A regular department, "The Living Moment", is given over to reports of the immediate social and individual problems of a sad tired world. Among the several short stories is one, "The Swag, the Spy and the Soldier" which is as delightfully amusing as anything I have read for months.

Perhaps the most interesting material in the present issue is to be found in the department called "The Critical View." One of the essays, "Shelly's Heirs," is a discussion of the weakening of social and political interest among the post-Newtonian poets of Great Britain. In "Natural Men and Political Man" Edwin Muir contends that modern literature, like all modern life, has accomplished "a reduction of the image of man, who has become simpler, more temporal, more realistic, and more insignificant." Which suggests our immediate social need is for a revaluation of man as a whole, as an ethical being responsible for his own salvation, whatever that may be.

The Varsity's Aim

The past week has noted a marked change in Ajax Skulemen. About the residences, much of the carefree and happy-go-lucky atmosphere has given way to one of a more serious and thoughtful nature.

Many of the students here are from the ranks of those who have served their country and who are now availing themselves of the opportunity for furthering their education, which the government has been generous in providing.

In the same manner in which they went about their business of "doing their bit" during the war, they are now putting everything into their work. True, they do find time for some play, but their whole attitude has been one of earnest application.

It is into such an atmosphere of strain and tension that The Varsity is now making its appearance.

Typical of this background is the Tuesday issue which most of the students did not see until they were coming out of the examination room after wrestling with Chemistry questions for two hours. With their papers handed in, they wanted to relax and to forget.

It has been the belief of the editor-in-chief that The Varsity has a duty to perform for the students at Ajax, and that it has a contribution to make to the life of the Ajax campus.

It is our belief, therefore, that The Varsity in the presentation of reading material of a lighter nature at this time, is serving a useful purpose in providing a medium of escape for the tension under which Skulemen have been living during this past week.

It has been not at all easy to put out a paper this week and there have been times when the morale of the staff has been very low. It was at such times that these beliefs in our own value to the study body came as a source of strength and urge to carry on.

Engineering Versus Arts

Why does a student change from an Engineering Course to an Arts Course? The "Skuleman" might say because the former course was too hard. The Artsman might hazard patriotically that the Arts Course is a better training. However, neither of these is true of either course.

The positions and jobs of the world—however lacking in prestige or however swathed in glory—may all be classified in two ways.

In the first instance there are those who are generally referred to as Engineers, physicists, scientists, etc. Their concern is chiefly for the real things of life; the provings of absolute formulae by the use of known and proven realities. Theirs is the concrete task of building and bettering the material quality and quantity of modern civilization. Their thoughts, although frequently original and unique, are patterned on those laws which man has said, over the years gone by, must be so. These, then, are the realists.

On the other hand, there are the philosophers, psychologists, economists, etc., who are more interested in the mental side of humanity. Theirs is the work of reactions, averages, conversations, observations and the intricate details which go to make a satisfied and congenial society. Theirs is the broader mental task of keeping the populace emotionally healthy. Theirs is the task of diagnosing the mental ills, upsets and antagonisms. These then are the idealists.

However there often lies no distinct divisional equator between these two classes of society. The most technically brilliant engineer will never reach the top unless he has the ability to write interesting, concise and authentic reports and a personality reasonably conducive to an amiable association with his fellow workers. Conversely, few psychologists or philosophers can be completely effective unless they know how to fix a burnt-out light or sharpen a pencil or add two and two.

Further, there are those, doctors and dentists for instance, whose practical technical knowledge is lost, to considerable extent, unless they are able to psychologically solicit and gain the confidence of their patients, yet whose persuasive and inspiring conversation may be for naught unless they employ the proper practical treatment. The garage owner must be able to talk his client into the purchase of a new car, but must also have the ability to see that the car is then kept in good condition.

Essentially, though, there are few men who master both of these arts. Perhaps a master of engineering principles with a smattering of humanitarianism, or a master of the humanities with only a smattering of the sciences, but seldom can a man coast as master of them both.

No, the idealist, the thinker, the orator, cannot succeed without, or be ignored by, the realist, the planner, and the builder. The most successful state is the one which can most successfully co-ordinate the efforts of these two types and thereby obtain the most of the best from the happiest.

his Grade 2 in theory. His library contains the works of many composers but the music of Bach and Chopin is his favorite. His playing is only a hobby to him but many students have enjoyed listening to his interpretations of the classics.

After 2½ years of service in the R.C.A.F. Jack Perrin came to Ajax to study Chemical Engineering. His playing will be well appreciated by many students who are lovers of the classics.

The Steiny Grand Piano in the Music Room of Hart House is open to all students who wish to play classical music. There is a request that no popular music is to be played on the Grand. The key to the piano may be obtained from the Hart House office.

HAPPY EASTER

The staff of THE VARSITY wishes to all its readers a pleasant vacation and a Happy Easter-Tide.

We hope that you will return to Ajax to continue your course refreshed and rested after the nine days of vacation.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Pete Philpott

Why doesn't Ajax enter a team in the inter-Collegiate Rugby next year? That is a question which has come up in Ajax sports circles many times.

Although I'm inclined to think that we should at least try, I have tried not to be biased. The directors of the Ajax Division and the Queen's Park Campus have both done their best to make Ajax feel that they are part of The University of Toronto. Here they have succeeded. Ajax enjoys the facilities of Hart House, and all other conveniences offered to the Queen's Park student. If we enter a separate rugby team, would we be breaking away in spirit from the Mother Campus? I say no. We are going to be in Toronto in a year and a half. We wear U. of T. crests. We claim that S.P.S. produces the best Engineers. Here our spirits ends. We don't care if Trinity beats S.P.S. in sports. We can't sit in the Toronto Hart House and tell the Arts Men that they are a bunch of no goods. The rivalry between the courses in Toronto is their spirit, not ours. Our spirit is solely in our unified comradeship. Our U. of T. spirit will neither wane nor rise. Our Ajax spirit is at it's peak, it can only go down. We at Ajax have no rivalry with the rest of the University, and thence no great U. of T. spirit.

An Ajax team on the grid-iron would bring the two camps together en masse in friendly rivalry.

To get down to brass tacks, we have plenty of men at Ajax who will be playing for the blue and white next fall. When will these fellows practice? Are they going to commute between Toronto and Ajax after school? These are just a few of the questions that are going to be asked next fall. We also have on our farm many potential rugby players who would play for the blue and white if they had the practice.

What we are missing is real University spirit and the best way to solve it is competition in which every one participates.

What is Borden Ball? This is a modification of Olympic Handball, football and basketball. It originated at Camp Borden in 1940; the concocter was Andy Ley who was at that time serving as a Y.M.C.A. War Service Secretary at Camp Borden.

The game at Ajax will be played on the hockey cushions after Easter. The purpose—to eliminate surplus Engineers. There are six men to each team, a goalkeeper, two defence men, three forwards and as many substitutions as you can get.

The referee in some secluded place flips pennies with the captain of the teams. Secluded place because gambling is taboo. The referee throws the rugby ball to center forward of the team winning the toss. The ball carrier can take three steps and then must throw the ball or hold it for three seconds. The penalty is loss of the ball. The other players must keep at least three feet away from the ball carrier. If they don't a foul shot on their goal is the penalty. If a pass should be incomplete, the ball goes to the opposite

VOLLEYBALL LEAGUE ENDS

Residence 730 wins Volley Ball championship.

Last Saturday saw the culmination of the volleyball league, with Residence 730 defeating Residence 732 3 games to 2 in league final.

The semi-finals saw Harvey's Hardies from 730 pitted against McCreedy's Maulers from 737 and Roe's Roughriders of 727 against the Brown Bombers of 724.

The Hardies (730) defeated the Maulers (737) in 2 straight games while it took the Bombers (724) three games to eliminate Roe's Roughriders. This was a very closely contested contest with Roe's Roughriders really riled, the final score being 15-13. Referee Patterson was called upon to render some extremely close decisions and really did a good job.

Referee Roe ruled the roost from the top of the ladder for the final game and had some really close ones to call, a couple of times almost falling off the ladder trying to reach a decision. All in all it has been an excellent series with the calibre of play improving considerably since the league started early in February.

The referees who have called the play Saturday after Saturday during the season deserve a great deal of credit—these include Patterson, Musson, Roe, McCreedy and Elder.

The following teams are winners of their respective groups:

Res. 724	Group 1
Res. 727	Group 2
Res. 730	Group 3
Res. 737	Group 4

team at the place where the ball was missed. The penalty shot is a free shot on the goal from seven yards outside. Both feet must remain on the ground until the goal is scored or missed. About the goal there is a five yard semi-circle. A player holding the ball must not step within this crease. If he does he loses possession of the ball. Even after throwing the ball he is subject to a penalty shot if he steps over the line. A player loses possession of the ball when he steps outside of the playing area. The playing time is two fifteen minute halves with five minutes between.

As potential Engineers we should apply our knowledge to sports as well as paper. Take for instance the problem of "how many bowls of soggy, soupy gray cream of oats we should eat before a game of baseball. This is a very interesting problem. If we have the player carried to the field and so lose no calories we have this problem. Gunther (our hero) sits on a bench 's' feet from the ground. He is 'S' feet high and weighs 'x' pounds so the total amount of energy needed to raise Gunther is (S-s) (X) (a) foot-pounds. Now because its the first inning Gunther is keyed up so when he goes to bat he travels at 'v' feet per second. If he strikes out, Gunther will go to bat the next time a quarter as fast. If he hits the ball he will be so fagged out that he will still come up to bat a quarter as fast and so make a geometric progression each time up to bat. Let him be up to bat 'R' times, then the sum of the velocities is equal to $v(1-0.25 \text{ to the } R \text{ times})/0.75$. Now he travels around the bases the first time at V feet per second and as before his velocity is slowed a quarter each time. The sum of the velocities about the bases is $V(1-0.25 \text{ to the power } y)/0.75$. The ball is travelling at 'm' feet per second and weighs 'y' 0.31 pounds. Any fool can see that the ball's energy is (0.51) (0.31/g) (m) foot pounds. To hit the balls 'Z' feet he must use (0.51) (0.31/g) (m) plus (0.51) (0.31/g) (Z square) foot pounds.

Summing the energy we have:

(S-s) (X/32) (a) plus (V) (0.75) to the R power (squared) (0.5) (X/g) plus (0.51) (0.310/g) (m) plus (0.5) (0.31/g) (Z squared).

Thus for an average red-blooded Ajaxian youth it would require 476 calories. Applying Cookes variable constant we get nine bowls of "soggy, soupy gray cream of oats".

EVERYDAY WASHDAY AT CAMPUS LAUNDRY

On a bright, sunny afternoon when soft fluffy clouds float on high and students were relaxing after a most exasperating examination someone was roaming through the Ajax laundry building No 701 on a tour of investigation. Those of you who were not completely fatigued may have been out enjoying your favorite sports of baseball or touch rugby while the laundry building tour was on.

The manager of the laundry, Mr. T. Wiecek, pointed many features of interest in the well-equipped emporium. Amongst the many pieces of interesting paraphernalia there were also some very attractive young ladies. The tour was not exactly to see the girls who work there but it didn't hurt to look over in their direction once in a while.

When you enter the building you are not surprised to find the place exceptionally clean as well as perfectly organized. The washing section is on the right hand side of the room. There is a large Cascade washer some four feet in diameter and twelve feet long with a capacity of 300 pounds per batch. This amount is washed in just thirty minutes. In this washer only white goods and fast coloured goods are laundered as there is a special small washer for sweaters which have colours that may run.

The clothes go from the washers to the centrifugal driers where they are almost completely dried. This centrifuge travels at about 800 r.p.m. and at this velocity most of the water is thrown out of the clothes. The next process is the complete drying in a hot air whirling drum. Socks are not dried in this way but are done on steam heated stocking forms. This prevents shrinkage. A careful examination at this time shows up holes which are repaired free of charge.

OUR AMBITIONS

As the first term comes to a close, we wish to take the opportunity of expressing our thanks to the faithful members of the staff who have stood by us nobly and to those who have devoted their time to writing for us, or for helping in the hundred odd jobs which crop up waiting to be carried out.

Great plans have been made for the coming term. Our new policy is to present news of both local and general interest to our readers; and an attempt has already been made to display cuts; this will be carried on in the future as far as possible.

In the feature section, new features have been planned, one of them being, "Know your University" and will be an attempt to inform the students of the various organizations and institutions on the campus.

Appearing elsewhere in this issue (we hope) is a cartoon drawn by Ajax talent, which is the first of a series, to follow.

Such an ambitious programme, requires help in carrying it out and we know that we can count on you for help.

THE BLUE AND WHITE

Old Toronto, Mother ever dear,
All thy sons thy very name revere,
Yes, we hail thee, ne'er will fail thee,

But will seek thy glory with our might,

Yes, we are ever loyal, faithful,
frank and strong,

We will sound thy praises in 'our song,

Aye and cheer both loud and long,
The Royal Blue and White,

Toronto is our University,
Shout, oh shout, men of every faculty,

Velut arbor aevo,
May she ever thrive, Oh
God for ever bless our Alma Mater.

Soon our college days will all be past,

Duty bids us part from friends at last;

But we'll sever, trusting ever
Love for Varsity may us unite;
Then we'll serve the mother of us all,

And the merry days of youth recall,
While, whatever may befall,
We'll flaunt the Blue and White.

Look at the beautiful things; they are all around for those who have eyes to see.

and the dentist understands it is to be at D.V.A. rates, the dentist may bill this to D.V.A.

If, because of change of address since application was made, you are authorized to a dentist to whom it is impossible for you to go, see the Advisory Bureau regarding arrangement for reallocation.

Once you have been assigned to a dentist, and the discharge work is complete, appointments for further work which crops up may be arranged with Christie Street Hospital through the Advisory Bureau. You are eligible for this D.V.A. dental care through their clinic during the months you are in attendance at university under rehabilitation benefits. Appointments will be made, as far as possible, to suit your convenience.

Financial

It is possible that some students under D.V.A. benefits may not be acquainted with the following amendments to D.V.A. regulations:

(1) Modification of regulations governing supplemental examinations:

In no case shall a grant be continued to a discharged person who having failed in one or more classes or subjects in any academic year fails in more than one of the supplemental examinations next offered by the university in any of such classes or subjects.

The above amendment to be retroactive in operation to and including the first day of July 1945.

(2) Modification of regulation governing deductions from training grant:

(a) As of November 1st, 1945, no deduction shall be made from the Training grant payable to full time trainees on account of earnings, where such other earnings do not exceed $75.00 per month.

(b) As of November 1st, 1945, no deduction shall be made from a married veteran's basic grant of $80.00 unless the monthly earnings of his wife are in excess of $75.00. Where the wife's monthly earnings are in excess of $75.00 a month, the grant shall be on the basis of a single man.

ly," answered Spru Sevilla, displaying his bottle-opening teeth, "but I have no memory for faces."

"There was a short fat guy with blond hair and a small moustache who could be Fydel," commented Joe Shrudle, well-known bell-hop, in answer to questioning. The interview was cut short by Mr. Shrudle, who had a bell to hop.

Questioned as to his intentions regarding his future, Fydel stated that he had no plans aside from continuing his course, if allowed to do so, for "regardless of my present knowledge, I still feel that there is something left for me to learn. That has been proved beyond a doubt, by the present examinations."

The chemistry staff announced this evening that, by means of a very dangerous experiment, they have determined the exact density of Uranium complex U-239Z. In plain language, for the benefit of laymen, it amounts to the amazing total of three thousand and nineteen pounds per cubic foot of material. This is explained by the amazingly close concentration of atoms and the terrific density of the individual atom.

Further experiments showed that the potential energy contained in each atom amounts to a number that can be represented by one followed by five hundred and twelve zeros of heat calories.

An undisclosed member of the staff also stated that Uranium complex U-239Z has a great future, not only in the explosive field, but in other fields as well. "The discovery will be a boon, Daniel, especially to dentists. The great density will give a strong solid foundation for use in fillings and the weight will do much toward developing a good anti-clack denture."

At present the investigating committee are awaiting the arrival of the geiger-counter from the physics laboratory on the Queen's Park campus. The geiger-counter will facilitate the estimation of radioactivity. At present it is known that Uranium U-239Z is radioactive for half its life before it disintegrates into protoactinium, which later breaks down into thorium. It is not known just what period of life U-239Z does enjoy, if any.

At the time of going to press, the committee was holding a special night meeting which was barred to the press and the public. Nothing could be learned of the nature of this conference.

Fire Averted

A catastrophic fire was averted early yesterday afternoon in Residence 731 when Alex McPhail of room 45 did some quick thinking and fast acting. Sitting at his bedside making a last minute review of descriptive geometry, he noticed a flickering light waving across his book and glanced up. Large orange flames were surging up merrily in his corner wastebasket, perilously close to the closet curtains. With the help of Gordon MacKendrick he got the basket out into the hall where the flames were put out by stamping and smothering them.

The blaze started as a result of the combination of several old newspapers in the basket and an unextinguished match deposited inadvertently by a cigarette smoker who had just gone out the door. The flames attained a considerable size in the course of their brief life, but were doused in remarkably short order. Damage caused by the blaze was the cost of a coat of paint on the wastepaper basket, said coat of paint being originally green but is now a mixture of green and golden brown. The newspapers were a total loss.

Victory Convocation Friday

At a special "Victory" Convocation celebrating the contribution of the Canadian armed forces to the victory of the United Nations, the University of Toronto will confer honorary degrees Friday night on three men and two women representing all branches of the services.

The ceremonies will take place in Convocation Hall Friday evening, April 26, at 8:30. Tickets of admission for undergraduates are available at the three S.A.C. offices today.

The degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa) will be conferred on the following:

General Henry Duncan Graham Crerar, C.H., C.B., D.S.O., formerly Commander, First Canadian Army Overseas.

Air Marshal Robert Leckie, C.B., D.S.O., D.S.C., D.F.C., Chief of Air Staff.

Colonel Agnes Campbell Neill, R.R.C., Matron-in-Chief, Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps.

Admiral Percy Walker Nelles, C.B., formerly Chief of Naval Staff.

Captain Adelaide Macdonald Sinclair, O.B.E., M.A., Director, Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service.

General Crerar and Captain Sinclair will address the Convocation.

GENERAL HENRY DUNCAN CRERAR

Having graduated from Upper Canada College and the Royal Military College, Kingston, Ont., Gen. Crerar took a position with the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission. He became a lieutenant in the last war in the non-permanent active militia, and a brigade-major of the 5th Canadian Divisional Artillery, and later, an artillery staff officer in the Canadian Corps. With the ending of the war he had numerous and varied positions. At the outbreak of this war he went overseas to prepare the arrival of the 1st Canadian Division. In 1941 he became major-general, commander of the 2nd Canadian Division and then temporary commander of the 1st corps. He directed the Dieppe raid, manoeuvred in North Africa, France and Italy. He was promoted to General on Nov. 21, 1944.

CAPT. ADELAIDE MACDONALD SINCLAIR

Toronto born, Captain Sinclair went to school at Haverhill College and then attended lectures in economics at the University of Toronto, where she later became dean of University College. Still interested in economics she took a post-graduate course at the University of London, England, and the University of Berlin. On her return Captain Sinclair was on the executive of the Toronto Barristers' Council and the president of the Pappa Alpha Theta Fraternity. She also organized the city-wide salvage collection in 1942. She left to join the War Time Prices and Trade Board in Ottawa as economic advisor. Acting Captain Adelaide Sinclair joined the navy in 1943. Having spent three months in England to study the organizations there, she returned to be director of the WRENS.

AIR MARSHAL ROBERT LECKIE

The man who paid a dollar a minute to learn to fly at the Curtis Flying School was born in Scotland and came to Canada at the age of 16. He enlisted in the last war and was a sub-lieutenant in the Royal Naval Air Service with a distinguished record of several zeppelins shot down. From commander of No. 1 Canadian Wing he became lieutenant-colonel in the Central Ontario Regiment and later a member of Canada's air board. Air Marshal Leckie was the first to complete a trans-Canada flight and this opened up new roads of aviation. After many posts in England and abroad including China and Malta he returned to Canada in 1941 as senior officer of a party of officers and men to form the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

COLONEL AGNES CAMPBELL NEILL

The graduate of the University of Toronto School of Nursing, Colonel Agnes Campbell was the head of the nursing service overseas, serving as matron-in-chief. She had completed her internship at the Toronto General Hospital and then taken a post-graduate course in 1935 at Bedford College in London, England. Having returned to Toronto, she became matron of Toronto General Hospital. When war broke out she was the first to volunteer for overseas duty and reached England with the first batch of nurses in June 1940. Some time later Colonel Neill became the matron of No. 15 Canadian General Hospital. Later still Agnes Neill became colonel of the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps Nursing Service of which she is now the head.

ADMIRAL PERCY WALTER NELLES

The first sailor born and trained in Canada to hold the rank of admiral, is the son of Blackfoot parents and a graduate of the Lakefield Preparatory School and Trinity College School of Port Hope. The man who was the chief of naval staff in 1934 had been enrolled as a midshipman at the age of 16 on C.M.S. Convalda. Later he was transferred onto H.M.C.S. Niobe which was wrecked off Cape Sable. At the age of 24, Admiral Nelles became a flag-lieutenant to Admiral Kingsmill in 1917. In 1925 he was promoted to commanding officer of Esquimaux on the H.M.C.S. Nade and then in Halifax on H.M.C.S. Stadacona. Admiral Nelles sailed on H.M.S. Dragon to the South Americas and came home in command of the ship and later of the fleet.

Special "Victory" Convocation Issue

Editor W. Hugh Kenner, B.A.
 Assistant Martha Schober, 4T7
 Business and Advertising Manager E. A. Macdonald, B.A.

Wednesday, April 24, 1946

Hail Victors

Friday's "Victory" Convocation needs no advertisement and no comment. That the University should in some special way express its gratitude for the cessation of hostilities and its debt to the armed forces who made victory possible is both fit and significant.

In honoring the Canadian land, sea and air commanders and two representatives of the extensive women's services, the University is honoring every man and woman who worked and fought under their command. The thousands of ex-service students currently attending the University, along with those still awaiting discharge, those now absorbed into the nation's work, and above all those who lie beneath rows of neat crosses until the last trumpet blows for every warrior, are receiving Friday night a collective academic accolade.

It is the University's especial business so to honor them. It is true that they have been honored universally; it is true that the citizens of the Dominion feel for their warriors, returned and dead, an affection and a gratitude continually expressed and continually beyond expression. But the honor a University can bestow is of a different and equally significant kind.

One might put the difference plainly, if over-simply, by drawing on the old antithesis of the head and the heart. The public rejoices; the University registers approval. The public, stirred by feats of valor, by the drums and colors of a collective crusade, has swarmed to welcome the returning crusaders. The public, the nation, conscious of its own deliverance, has let its heart go out to the deliverers.

The University, on the other hand, is the incarnate expression of the national mind; as distinguished from the national mood. For once there is no opposition between mood and mind; but there is still an important distinction. Friday night's convocation is a public act wherein the public, through its instrument the University, adds mind to heart in thanking its warriors not because what they did was splendid but because it was good.

By their work the national mind has been left free to think; just as by their work the body has been left free to toil and the heart to feel. By their work the perpetual battle of the University for survival has been advanced; by their work the principles of intellectual freedom which the University extols and inculcates have been left free to function, and have been vindicated in the ordeal of battle.

It was anciently held, and indeed is still held though no longer avowedly, that right could be sifted from wrong through the test of final triumph. There was a time when a man charged of crime walked blindfolded among searing ploughshares; and he whose bare feet were unscathed at the end of that ordeal was adjudged to have right on his side.

A similar ordeal confronted the United Nations not long ago; and emerging uncrippled they may be thought to have vindicated those principles on whose behalf they plunged into the test. One of those principles was the principle of uncoerced thought; and the traditional guardian of that principle, the University, will on Friday night honor, through their commanders, the many thousands of men and women who on its behalf braved and triumphed in the ordeal, among the burning ploughshares of Satan and his lieutenant Mars.

Golden Books of Famous Names

By MARTHA SCHOBER

"This here is the Golden Book," said Mr. A. B. Sennell, "we keep it here in the registrar's vault because of its value."

The Golden Book has a maroon binding with gold lettering on it and many famous names in it. Every time a man or woman receives the honorary degree of Doctor of Civil Law, he or she signs it. Thus the names of these honored people remain guarded for posterity.

After the University of Toronto was created from King's College, the first honorary degree was bestowed upon Henry H. Croft, professor of Chemistry of University College, and also vice-chancellor. This procedure was suspended by statute and for 40 years no degrees were handed out. In 1889, 8 men received the honorary title. They were: Sir John A. Macdonald, Prime Minister of Canada; Edward D. Blake, Chancellor of the University of Toronto; Oliver Mowat, Premier of Ontario; William R. Meredith, Opposition of Mowat; John A. Boyd, Chancellor of the Province; John Campbell, student of Oriental literature; John Hoskin, lawyer; William T. Atkins, Dean of Toronto School of Medicine.

In 1890 the great fire destroyed the book but a new book was founded and each person signed once more except John A. Macdonald and Henry H. Croft, whose signatures were taken from some letters. This time there were new names added: Sir George Baden-Powell and Alexander Staveland-Hill, both of whom had helped with the building of the library, and John Landauer, Professor of Geology at Brunswick, Prussia.

The signatures are all different. There are large, round blobs that run crosswise across the page and then some up and down ones that touch the top and bottom of the page. Some are smeared and blotched, while others are shaky. Some are fancy, full of curls, while others are in dots and dashes of the Morse code—most of them illegible. Yet there are some precise, small jewel-like jobs, and some in public school writing.

On the first page we find the signatures of Edward D. Blake and Oliver Mowat. Next comes Sir William Mulock and Lord Lister, Lord Minto, Sir Charles Moss. Then suddenly on page 5, there are only 2 names, George and Edward P. That George V., and that neat little signature, while Edward pressed heavily on his pen.

"When the five representatives of services will have signed, we shall feel that all the men and women of the Forces will have been represented," stated Mr. Sennell.

Convocation Ceremonies Colorful

Military protocol has nothing on the ancient, complex ceremonies, said to be descended from the Guilds of the Middle Ages, by which a great University confers honorary degrees.

General Crerar, Air Marshal Leckie, Colonel Neill, Admiral Nelles, and Captain Sinclair will participate Friday night in these colorful rites, leading up to the conferring of the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa.

Clad in the red-and-pink robes of University of Toronto Doctors, they will receive the scarlet hood at the Chancellor's hands.

The principle of the Convocation is simple enough. The Chancellor, who confers the degrees, represents the entire body of the University's alumni. When he confers the degree, he signifies that the alumni are willing and happy to number the recipient of the degree among their number.

Everyone, of course, knows beforehand that the Alumni are ready and willing. The conferring of the degrees has been previously approved by the Senate, which represents the Alumni.

For purposes of the ceremony, however, the Chancellor knows nothing about the candidates whatever. They are brought forward and presented to him, and their worthiness to receive the degree outlined. The Chancellor, satisfied from what he is told that they are indeed worthy, then confers the degree in the name of the members of the university.

The presenter, in the case of honorary degrees, is usually the president of the University, Dr. Sidney E. Smith. The degrees will be conferred by Chancellor H. J. Cody.

The official outline of the procedure is appended below:

"The candidates for honorary degrees will assemble in the Chancellor's Room, Simcoe Hall, where their academic costumes will be laid out.

"Each candidate will wear the cap and gown appropriate to the degree which he is to receive, and will walk in procession to Convocation Hall where he will take the seat assigned to him upon the platform. He will remove his cap during the prayer and the singing of 'God Save the King', and during the time he is seated. When he rises to receive the degree, he should put on his cap and wear it until he returns to his seat after the degree has been conferred.

"The presenter, usually the President of the University, will rise and, after saluting the Chancellor, will request the candidate to rise. The candidate will remain standing in his place until the conclusion of the address of presentation, when he will approach the Chancellor who will take his hand and confer the degree upon him; at this instant, the Bedel will place the hood upon the candidate's shoulders.

"The Chancellor will then request the candidate to sign the Golden Book under the guidance of the Registrar; after the signing the candidate will resume his seat."

IAN MACKENZIE REPLIES TO STUDENT VETS' BRIEF

The following letter from the Minister of Veterans' Affairs has been received by the Ex-service Committee of the Students' Administrative Council through the National Conference of Student Veterans, and is published here for the information of ex-service students on this campus:

The brief embodying a series of resolutions, which you submitted on 19th January, 1946, has been studied by the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and some of the subjects have been discussed by the Advisory Committee on University Education. I am, therefore, now in a position to make an interim reply to your propositions, though, as will appear hereafter, many of them affect important matters of government policy, and will require further consideration at high levels before any final decision can be given.

1. Full Employment

It is the government's intention to ensure as high a degree of employment for the Canadian people as is feasible without curtailment of liberty; and according to our expert advisers, prospects for such high employment in the next summer and subsequently are very good.

2. Employment for Student Veterans

The importance of student veterans securing work in their holidays is well recognized. The general arrangements for placing veterans through the National Employment Service are available, and the preference extended to veterans in placement is effective.

It will be realized that it would be impossible to give a student veteran preference over any other veteran who might apply for work at the National Employment Service. However, the principle of referring the most suitable veterans first is followed, and the general level of ability of student veterans should ensure their early placement.

Married veterans must be prepared to accept work that will separate them from their families for the summer. This is the common experience of the engineering and surveying profession, for example. Our officials will study the possibilities of facilitating student veteran employment, with officials of the Department of Labour. Meanwhile, veteran students should themselves explore all possible avenues, with the help which university authorities usually extend.

3. Housing

Emergency measures on the lines you recommend are under discussion with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which now has the responsibility for co-ordinating all housing policy for the federal government, and it is hoped that it will be possible to get early action.

Your recommendations regarding long-term policy naturally relate to the housing problem generally, not specifically to that of student veterans. You may be sure that the point of view that you express will be carefully considered in formulating the government's housing policy.

4. Financial Matters

I feel I must comment on your observation that "The Government supported us during service, and therefore should underwrite our rehabilitation as they underwrote the war effort." This contains a fundamental misconception. Student veterans who are no longer in the service of Canada can hardly claim that the people of Canada are obliged to support them in the same way as those in the public employ (including military). What the people, through their representatives in Parliament, have agreed to do is to assist a veteran to complete his education; in the same way as certain students are assisted by scholarships. This being so, it is a question of how much assistance, in terms of direct allowances and facilities to universities, can be given.

Analysis of the students' cost-of-living survey carried out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is incomplete at present, and conclusions in all aspects of the problem cannot yet be drawn. Preliminary examination supports the contention that married veterans not living with relatives or in special low-cost housing projects, or whose wives are not working, are subject to such expense that it is doubtful that they will be able to complete their courses.

The opinion of the University Advisory Committee was that some form of help should be extended to married student veterans who need it, but that it would not be justifiable, on present indications to make a flat increase to the existing allowances.

In any case, increase in allowances to veterans taking educational and vocational training could not be made without similar adjustments to other allowances under the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, to hospital allowances, and probably also to War Veterans' Allowance and pensions. The increase you request would be of the order of 40 per cent, which would involve very great sums of money. The whole problem is so extensive and complex that in my view it will be necessary for it to be discussed by the Parliamentary Committee on Veterans Affairs before a decision can be reached.

Meanwhile, as well as pressing for assistance to universities in emergency housing, we have under study an additional grant to provide for books; payment of "commuting" costs for married veterans obliged to live so far from the campus that they cannot reach it by ordinary urban transport systems; and the setting up of local funds to be operated by the universities, which would be used to assist those who needed additional financing to get through their course.

Turning to your proposals under the heading "Education" —

1. The government's policy is to provide adequate facilities for all veterans who want training. Practical difficulties are great, however, and take time to overcome.
2. Department of Veterans Affairs does rely on the universities for advice as to whether the student veteran should continue his course.
3. The University Advisory Committee are of opinion that no change should be made to the present regulations regarding standards for eligibility for extension of allowances over the entitlement by reason of service. The Department agrees.
4. Present regulations provide that applications for training made after 15 months may be accepted, provided there is a good reason for the delay. There would seem to be no great argument for extending the 15 months to 36.
5. Great latitude is allowed in the selection of university for post-graduate work, subject to the provision, which needs no explanation, that courses outside of Canada will not be approved when suitable courses can be had in Canadian institutions.
6. To the extent that it is necessary and practicable, the Dept. of Veterans Affairs are placing representatives in educational institutions. As a rule, counselling and administrative arrangements are made by the universities themselves.
7. Reinstatement after one year's failure was deliberately left out of the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, which, I

Student Farmers Wanted

University of Toronto students will be joining the Ontario Farm Service Force during the summer. In view of the critical food shortage throughout the world, anyone who desires employment of this nature may receive it. The rate for starting for University men has been placed at 45c per hour; board and laundry costs $5.00 per week.

Attention is drawn to the fact that the camp regulations as outlined in the circular recently distributed to University students, by the Ontario Farm Service do not apply to University students. It is the intention to set up University camps and the camp will elect their own committee and make their own regulations. The camp regulations as printed on the circular which has been distributed apply only to workers under the age of sixteen.

A meeting has been arranged at Ajax in the Recreation Room on May 8th at 7:00 p.m. at which Mr. McLaren, Director, Ontario Farm Service Force, will outline the arrangements whereby Ajax students may be employed on the land during the six months' break in the late summer.

All who wish this employment are asked to register at the Students' Administrative Council Office, Ajax, Queen's Park. Students interested in this type of work should register immediately at the Students' Administrative Council Office in Hart House.

may remind you, was carefully considered by the Parliamentary Committee on Veterans Affairs last December.

8. The question of fees required for practicing a profession is under the jurisdiction of the professional bodies and provincial governments concerned. It is therefore suggested that you should approach them directly. We naturally support any measure that will facilitate veterans' rehabilitation.
9. The purchase of tools, etc., by veterans direct from War Assets Corporation has been under long and careful discussion, and it has been decided that it is impracticable. In some cases, student veterans may be able to purchase tools through Canadian Vocational Training, but otherwise it will be necessary to go to the dealers to whom War Assets Corporation sell in bulk.
10. While we are anxious to ensure that vocational training is adequate, it is doubtful that a simple extension of the length of time of school courses would meet the requirements. The subject is under continuous study.
11. In conclusion, let me say that your proposals have had careful consideration. It is realized that real self-denial and struggle are involved for many student veterans if they are to complete their education. Although it is not possible to accede to the majority of your requests, the Dept. of Veterans Affairs will, if necessary, endeavour to modify present regulations so that no veteran, whose abilities warrant it, will have to forego university education because of his economic circumstances.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) IAN MACKENZIE.

Committee Plans Housing Survey

The Ex-service Committee of the Students' Administrative Council recently met with the President of the University to discuss specifically the matter of housing at the University next year, with particular reference to housing for married ex-service students. It is now estimated that the attendance both on this campus and at Ajax will be approximately 16,000 students and it has been found that approximately 27% of the Veterans attending Canadian Universities are married.

A suggestion has been put forward to the Department of Veterans' Affairs that a commuter's allowance be paid to any ex-service students who have to travel more than 10 miles to attend University classes. With that in mind, the Ex-service Committee of the Council have planned a systematic and extensive survey by means of publicity and personal calls to obtain accommodation in the towns adjacent to Toronto such as New Toronto, Cooksville, Weston, Brampton, Agincourt, Richmond Hill, Aurora and New market.

Mr. Al Weir, Chairman of the Ex-service Committee of the Council will have active charge of this survey during the Summer. It is hoped that by next September the housing service of the Students' Administrative Council will be able to place satisfactorily everyone requiring living accommodation as was the case during the present year.

STUDENT RECORD PLEASES AIR CHIEF

By JAMES F. FYDELL

In an interview with The Varsity after receiving his honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, Air Marshal Robert Leckie expressed his interest in those who had served under him in the Royal Canadian Air Force during the period of hostilities.

"I have been informed," he said, "that the men who served in the R.C.A.F. have made an exceptionally good showing in their studies. They have shown a keen interest in their work and are to be commended on their training and discipline. This, I feel, was partly due to the rigorous syllabus we laid down for them. We made them work hard, but hard work has not hurt me and I did not believe it would hurt them. I shall be genuinely interested in their progress."

Regarding the future, Air Marshal Leckie stated that, "Twenty percent of the commissioned ranks would be selected from the universities". He went on to say, "these men will be excellent material, with their service experience and their university training." With regard to their age, he said, "It will make no difference. I was twenty-five when I learned to fly, and I was not too old. Even the older ones who have seen service will not be too old."

He stated that he felt the terms offered were good, comparable with those offered for the same type of work in industry. "They have seen the terms, and they seem to be good terms, and we shall be able to offer careers to twenty percent of the men."

"I am interested in their progress and I wish you to convey to the men my best wishes," he concluded.

During the early part of the war, Air Marshal Leckie played a great part in organizing the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, and the planning of the syllabus for the training of Air Crews.

Vets Commended By Army Chief

"Across Canada the veterans are continuing to set tremendously high standards in the academic field," said General Crerar, in an interview with The Varsity on Friday night.

"From the Maritimes to British Columbia the ex-service personnel are outstanding in every university. They realize the value of higher education and are making good use of the opportunities offered by the Government for their advancement," the General continued.

"Learning in the stern school of war that the well-trained man has a great advantage in life, the veteran knows the aid that his advanced learning will be to him in his future. The serviceman will never be sorry that he has availed himself of this great chance."

"In a like manner the Dominion will benefit by the increased number of citizens who will have added higher learning to their natural ability. The Canadian Rehabilitation Plan will pay dividends to the country as a whole."

Lack of Evidence Releases Editor

It was announced late last night by the Engineering Society that James Fyde, Editor of The Varsity, has been released from custody due to lack of evidence.

Mr. Michael J. McAuliffe, president of the Engineering Society, in making the announcement, said, "The atomic case has ended in anticlimax. The investigation was proceeding very well and we fully expected to finish the inquiry this week. However, the Uranium complex, U-2392, has, due to the process of spargefaction, broken down. The famous test-tube now contains nothing but the common lead ion. Therefore we have been forced to close the case through lack of evidence. Fyde will be released, unconditionally, and will be returned the test tube so that he can clear himself with the supply stores."

In a brief statement to the press Fyde said that he would not return the tube, "I intend to keep it as a memento of the case and to remind me of the days when I dined with Newton in the chemical bank. Now I'm simply rank."

"If the test tube is brought back here we will never issue it again," commented Tom Etolan, of the chemistry stores. "We do not want a recurrence of the past few weeks. It has held up the inventory we have to take on our supplies."

VICTORS RECEIVE HONOUR DEGREES

Traditional Ceremony In Convocation Hall

On Friday evening amid a large crowd which filled Convocation Hall, the University of Toronto paid its tribute to the armed forces by conferring the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, (honoris causa) upon the representative heads of the branches of the Service.

The five representatives of the services receiving the degree were, General Henry Duncan Graham Crerar, C.H., C.B., D.S.O., formerly Commander, First Canadian Army Overseas;

Air Marshal Robert Leckie, C.B., D.S.O., D.S.C., D.F.C., Chief of Air Staff;

Colonel Agnes Campbell Neill, R.R.C., Matron-in-Chief, Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps;

Admiral Percy Walker Nelles, C.B., formerly Chief of Naval Staff, and Acting Captain Adelaide Macdonald Sinclair, O.B.E., Director, Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service.

Dr. Cody, Chancellor of the University, conferred the degrees.

The crowd consisted of students, graduates and representatives of all branches of Canada's Armed Forces in their uniforms. The dark blue and gold of the Navy, the khaki of the army, the light blue of the Army Nursing Service, and Air Force blue lent a military atmosphere to the place, reminiscent of war days, not so long ago.

Quentin MacLean rendered a number of selections on the organ while the visitors were waiting.

Shortly after half past eight, the rear doors of the hall swung open and the procession entered and slowly filed up to the front of the great hall led by the Bedel Mr. L. B. Smith bearing the mace. Following him came Dr. Cody, Chancellor of the University and the President of the University, Dr. Sidney Smith, the candidates then following attired in the red and pink gowns and cap. The Government of Ontario was represented by Col. Welsh, Director of Publicity and Tourist Information. Among other distinguished guests was His Eminence James Cardinal McGuigan.

The Convocation was opened by a short prayer read by the Principal of University College, Dr. W. R. Taylor. Dr. Sidney Smith presented each of the candidates in turn. As each was presented, the Chancellor conferred the degree while the Bedel placed the red hood upon the shoulders of the candidate.

Each recipient was conducted by the University Registrar Mr. A. B. Fennell to the desk to sign the "Golden Book".

Following this General Crerar and Captain Adelaide Sinclair addressed the Convocation.

General Crerar thanked the University of Toronto for its tribute and said that "each and all contributed to our success". He spoke on the prevention of future wars and compared his position to that of a doctor of medicine whose interest was in prevention rather than cure. The General attributed war to a state of mind, and the preparation for war, the results of a mental outlook and ambitions aroused by the state of mind. "Armaments are like the spots in an attack of measles; they are the effect of the disease, not the cause." "War is as old as life itself, and is a social and economic problem, not a technical one. War must therefore be studied as a form of politics."

General Crerar stated that war was an attempt to settle a dispute and that in the international sphere disputes were the result of differences of opinion. Great majorities were not supporters of the status quo, he stated "and it is right that we strive to better conditions under which we live, provided that we do not try to inflict worse conditions on others."

He expressed the opinion that Canada must play its part, and hateful though such an opinion may be, recourse to force must be faced.

"Democracy is loathe to resort to war as an instrument of national policy. A nation enjoying freedom of thought and speech believes in evolution rather than in revolution."

"However, peace-loving democracies must be prepared to meet those less-informed who wish to settle grievances by violent means."

The General continued his speech saying that he believed that in time recourse to force would be unthinkable, but until that day the forces who support peaceful settlement must be prepared to defend their proposition.

"The British Empire and Commonwealth may be a primitive concept to the internationalist but it has shown a unanimity of opinion and strength in the past and has saved us from disaster and cannot be rejected, but let us look for wider groupings and international organization." In conclusion he warned against "the tendency to turn our backs on experience, painful though they may be" and of "making the same tragic mistake again."

Dr. Adelaide Sinclair who during the war was Director of the Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service, spoke on the part played by women during the war and their place in the post-war world.

"The Armed Services of Canada have drawn heavily on the University of Toronto and are much in debt to the University." Formerly on the staff of the University, Dr. Sinclair said that she felt it was a great honour from her University.

"Women do not welcome war, but they did welcome the opportunity to serve," she said. She touched humorously on the feeling regarding women entering the services, relating two anecdotes which had come to her knowledge. One of them was about the irate farmer who complained that since they had obtained women cooks at the unit, the quantity of waste food had diminished to such an extent that he could no longer fatten his pigs on the garbage collected from the mess hall.

She traced the development of women's participation in the services from the days when women filled positions in which they had civilian experience until the time when women were entrusted with operations in which men's lives were at stake. "Women showed," she said, "that they could take dis-

Wearing the traditional red and pink gowns of Doctor of Laws, the five Candidates representing the various branches of the Service, are seen standing outside the Chancellor's office just before the Special Convocation at which they received the honorary degree last Friday evening.

Left to right they are: Admiral Percy Nelles, formerly Chief of Naval Staff; Captain Adelaide Sinclair, Director of Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service, and Graduate of the University of Toronto; General Henry Duncan Graham Crerar, formerly Commander, First Canadian Army, Overseas; Air Marshal Robert Leckie, Chief of Air Staff, and Colonel Agnes Neill, Matron-in-Chief, Nursing Service, Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps.

Hand That Waved Wand Guides Pen For Hot-Jaxs

Once upon a time there was a guy who thought he'd like to be a band-leader! Little did he realize what he was getting in to!

The VARSITY wanted a story about our band so guess-who was Joe'd to write it! Well here it is, a concise history of the HOT-JAX!

The day after Ajax officially opened, that is, on Tuesday Jan. 15, 1946, yours truly could be seen trudging along Queen's road, posting notices in each residence. These were the embryo (plural?) of our band. Each was an invitation to anyone interested in forming a dance-band to come and see me within a week. Nearly all the boys now in the band came as a result of that notice. The others have been attracted by their desire to enjoy Le Jazz at first hand.

Now that we had a list of everyone, we had a meeting in the Hart House Common room, where we decided our policy. After some discussion we agreed that the purpose of our organization would be to further our own musical enjoyment and to encourage the playing of popular music, and so better our individual talent. We also decided that if anyone wanted us to play, then we would, providing those of us in the union could do so. As you probably know we have been providing music for the athletic nights, although some people may take offence at the word "music"!!

By a coincidence, at the time we were meeting, a magazine photographer happened along and our picture appeared in the next issue. The band as it now stands needs a tenor sax, a bass, a guitar and a lot of practice! My friends comment that it is improving and others that it has a peculiar odour! But nevertheless we are having a lot of fun, and the experience is doing us some good if no one else! The fellows in the band range from experienced dance musicians to those who have been playing only a few years. Our purpose is to provide an opportunity for these chaps to keep up their practice to have fun doing it, and to participate in some extracurricular activities.

Esprit de Corps

The seriousness with which the students took their work was evidenced during the last few weeks of the first term. However, when the crisis was past it was only to be expected that a reaction of some kind occur.

A group of keen young men, full of the exuberance of youth, are bound to demand an outlet for that superfluous energy. It was bound to come. It came in the form of an inter-house pitched battle. Once a group of men become imbued with the spirit of fun, and a certain mass psychology takes over, it is difficult to foretell the results. In many cases, commonsense is thrown utterly to the winds and "anything goes." In such cases, excesses occur and regrettable results follow in the form of property damage, or even loss of limb or of life.

That the results were not more disastrous reflects great credit to the men themselves. They were out for fun, but even in the midst of their reckless gaiety some of those who had possibly inadvertently carried things a bit too far were brought back by a more thoughtful faction.

The parties concerned are to be commended on this exercise of control.

In a community like Ajax, with its flimsy wooden structures, there is ever lurking a great danger—that of fire. During the past year fire has taken a large toll in human lives and has become a very serious problem for those in responsible positions.

Under conditions such as exist in a small isolated community with the nature of its buildings and the large number of human lives concentrated into the space of a residence, the problem becomes more serious than even in a large city, with its more elaborate fire-fighting equipment.

Co-operation of everyone with the fire department is therefore a vital must. All people realize this, but often in the excitement of gaiety and fun reason vanishes and impulsive thoughtless acts which endanger life and property are performed. It is well to realize this and guard against them.

Would it not be worth while then for parties to come to some understanding as to what limits are to be observed in the explosion of human energy?

We feel that the parties involved are to be commended on another score. The whole show was carried on in bitter rivalry, but with malice toward none. The parties shook hands and made up. It was learned afterwards that following the "war," a great deal of fraternization took place. New acquaintances were made, and new friendships had their beginning. Jacksmen had become better acquainted with Jacksmen.

The Ballet Russe

by OWEN J. LEMYRE

A grand and colorful show has been at the Royal Alex for the last two weeks and anyone who missed the opportunity of seeing this extravaganza really missed something. Music lovers of the classics enjoyed seeing the ballets for which their favorite music was written. Lovely Alexandra Danilova the greatest living ballerina, was the leading member of the cast of 125 who appeared at Toronto's opera house. She was born in St. Petersburg and studied ballet at the Russian State School of Ballet.

The Ballet Russe is perhaps the only organization of its kind owned by a non-profit Trust and whose receipts are used for the advancement of ballet. This exhibition of fine talent was well worth seeing although many of you may think the ballet is out of your field of enjoyment. You would be surprised to see such modern dances as "Frankie and Johnny." The lovely ballerinas would also delight you as they display their talents of choreography. Some of them are Maria Tallchief, Ruthanna Boris, Nathalie Krassovska and Marie-Jeanne.

Mstislav Doboujinski did some beautiful work on the stage settings for "Imperial Ballet." Humor is accentuated in "Frankie and Johnny"; the music of Fredrick Chopin, in "Les Sylphides" and the "Chopin Concerto"; and grace and beauty, by the entire cast in all dances they presented. It is hoped that this wonderful production will be back again soon in order that all who missed the last presentation will have another chance to see it.

What has happened to Mart Kenney's "Western Gentlemen"? This band has certainly slipped since Kenney has tried to make two bands out of his original group. He has given Art Hallman a really hot band but he has dealt him-

ALIS IN AJAXLAND

(INSTALLMENT 3)

After having duly signed, sigma X'd, and signals crossed the required forms of registration as prescribed by the great white chiefs, Alis was now confronted with the horrible thought of fees; tuition, intuition; incidental, outcidental, occidental, accidental; athletic, pathetic; and, of course, the customary 10% which goes to the fund for aged and confirmed artsmen.

Where to raise the money? The problem rose before him with alarming preponderance. He considered the possibilities. Woodbine would not be open till the 24th of May. Santa Claus would not be around till Christmas. He could get a job till January... he shuddered at the thought.

He thought of his old-time rackets—tennis, ping pong, squash, turnip, cauliflower (Cafeteria please note: There ARE other vegetables besides cabbage and peas) but no, none of these would suffice.

Then one day as he was getting on the streetcar by the middle door, he noticed an advertisement by the Lachance finance corporation offering a loan of $500 for four years at only 12% interest per month if single; if married, 26% per month; if neither, 4—now wait a minute, "That's not feasible," thought Alis. "But if I go to University, it'll mean 291 dollars, and every bit of that will be feasible." With this thought in mind, he decided to take the plunge.

He remarked later that the water was rather cold for that time of year.

With the 500 smackers safely tucked away in the rumble seat of his tricycle, he rode joyously back to C. E. Hugginsbutton in his diamond studded office, with the inscription on the door: "Veni, Vidi, I Paid." The exact meaning of these cryptic words has never been quite determined but it is generally accepted that the bars on the door and the bull whips in evidence have some bearing on the existing conditions.

In answer to his knock, a head appeared over the transom and demanded the nature of his business. Alis was prepared for just such a situation.

He pretended he was working for a farm implement company and told the girl he was selling nylon hose. Of course, she threw open the door because she had just been thinking of her spring gardening. As Alis strode inside he began to sing in a loud baritone voice his employer's theme song—the well known melody "Only Our Hoes."

Once inside the door he explained to the disillusioned girl what the score was (700 points down four tricks doubled), and then went up to the man in the cage marked "cashier." Alis could never figure out why they always kept those men in cages, because he always had to use a hacksaw or a file whenever he made a big business deal.

He handed the dough to the man in the wicket, who counted it and

Collecting A Minor Writer

ROBERT WEAVER

It would seem that for more than half a century controversy and disapproval have given Oscar Wilde's life and work their single consistently intriguing flavour. Even today this makes it almost impossible to be unbiased about Wilde. His character too regularly and completely intrudes on his work; and the work itself intrudes, with a great deal more force than merit alone account for, on certain literary tendencies since his time. In his introduction to The Viking Portable Oscar Wilde (MacMillan of Canada, $2.75), Richard Aldington, the British essayist, novelist and poet, is compelled by the debatable character of his subject to offer an interesting and able, if sometimes too strident and one-sided; defence of Wilde, both as writer and man.

Aldington is perfectly correct when he writes that "it is impossible not to feel that so violent a reaction on the part of society and its legal representatives showed that there was something as wrong with that society as with its prisoner." Today we could disregard the entire question of Wilde's personality, if his followers did not choose to emphasize just such questions of personality, in preference generally to simple literary ability. For Wilde, at least to his tribe, stands as one of the supreme examples of the artist who, in abstracting art from the greater problems of life, would further abstract the individual from responsibility to society and, more tragically perhaps, to self.

What do his followers attempt? The free creative individual is set in comparison to a mass society of philistines—a nice and thoroughly dishonest simplification which, if accepted, forces all opposition into a hopeless position for debate. Of course, as we should realize by now, these artists simply offer real philistinism a happy alliance. They help to drive the mass of readers into the eager arms of the popularizers, meanwhile showing every willingness to accept from the society they despise a tenuous fame and a very real financial return.

Aside from the ethics of such conduct, we may consider its effect on the writers themselves. The Viking Portable Wilde contains sufficient evidence: we may class Wilde as the minor writer he really was. There is a slick highly-decorative style, which might be called somewhat feminine and cold; the content can readily be forgotten. There is The Picture of Dorian Gray, which only Hollywood could have rendered less interesting than the original; and the famous Ballad

Phantasmagoria

"THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S"

Another one of Leo McCarey's productions is heading for Academy Award honors as Bing Crosby and Ingrid Bergman present to you the problems of an impoverished parish school. Crosby appears as the lovable Fr. Chuck O'Malley and Miss Bergman as the beautiful and pious nun, Sister Benedict, who has a will of iron. As you remember in "Going My Way" Fr. O'Malley had Fr. Fitzgibbon to cross up his plans while Sister Benedict, the mother superior, crosses his path in "The Bells of St. Mary's."

St. Mary's was a parochial school in great debt and in much need of repairs. The nuns were forced to sell the playground in order to raise money to repair the school. Bogardus, a very wealthy old miser, was the buyer and it was he who constructed a modern new factory beside the school. The hope of the nuns was that Bogardus would present the building to them and it was interesting to see how Fr. O'Malley and Dr. McKay helped to bring about this miracle.

There were also other sub-plots, one of which involves a little girl named Patsy. She was left in charge of the nuns by her mother who could no longer provide a proper home for her. Patsy's mother and father had been separated since Pat was born and she was now thirteen. There had never been a real home for her. Fr. O'Malley also found Patsy's father and reunited the parents. Joe, the father of Patsy, was so happy to be able to offer his daughter a real home after she graduated from school. This picture is a "must" on your list and it will bring you much laughter as well as tears. Crosby sings "Aren't You Glad You're You," "The Bells of St. Mary's," "Adeste Fideles" and "The Land of Beginning Again." Miss Bergman also sings a hymn and a Swedish lullaby.

"NIGHT IN PARADISE"

The hilarious pantomime "A Night in Paradise" is another Aesop fable but one that he never wrote. It is a most amusing and expensive production and one well worth your time if you enjoy technicolor. You can not expect to have a serious trend with all the grandeur this Mongolian Beaver Rat?

Here's a warning to all those who read this column. This edition will have sports, no talks on Mother Finklesteins Meatballs (meat that is) or chat on the Mongolian Beaver-Rat; just sport.

Grace and Form

If tennis really does make one graceful there are going to be plenty of graceful oafs around the campus if the tennis courts remain as popular as they have been since they opened last Friday. However some potential beauties have complained about knobby knees and stubbed toes and we would just like to say that the courts are still being rejuvenated and that a little rain will be necessary before the courts can be properly rolled. The pile of cinders to the east of the courts will eventually give birth to two (choo choo. Joke) more tennis courts; rumor has it that they will be finished by May 15. I have had the question "Will the courts be used all the time for inter-mural activities?" come up so many times that I was forced to hide my bashfulness? and ask Buff Horton the Director of Athletics to clear up this little problem and here is what he said: "The two new courts will be used for casual play while the present courts are to be for team play." Thank you, Mr. Horton, we also hear that a practice board is to be set up and now we hear from the

Leisure Class

I'm only kidding, Golfers, it's a fine way to put Dynamics into practice. Saint Andrew's Golf Club in Toronto are extending to Ajax Students their special rate, just show your registration card and enjoy yourself. The Athletic Office is hoping that the same arrangements can be made with the Oshawa Golf and Country Club. Intra-mural tennis will be played in Oshawa.

Phantasmagoria

I offer humble apologies to our newly founded Moom Picture column but according to the dictionary it means "crowd or succession of dim or doubtful real figures" and that it what we will have when the players wander off the old hockey cushions after a game of Bord'n Ball. Already eight or ten teams are entered in the team competition. See your House Rep. about this game; it's a doozer.

Whiffo Is To Be Happening?

Base Ball will launch the Second Term Sports Season to a flying start Thursday evening when 737 and 727 will battle it out on the diamond north of the Rec. Hall. It has been rumored that Mike MacAuliffe, the Engineering Society President, has got tired of kissing babes and might throw in the first ball but when interviewed he said "$%&(!&". This game (not Mike's game) will usher in a season of softball, tennis, horseshoes, borden ball, golf, track and field. The intra-mural golf will be played in Oshawa, each residence entering once a month.

Puellae Frauleins Jeune Filles and Men

Yes, there will be another Athletic night next Monday and it is hoped that it will be as excellent as the last show. The Athletic Office has arranged that some of the Maple Leaf players will be out at Ajax to be interviewed as part of the program. It is hoped that Harry Davis the manager of the club and Hank Biassatti the Leaf's first base-man will be on hand. Of course our own Hot Jaxs will be there and if they play like they are now as this column is being written you will need your ear muffs. I'm only spoofing (arts lingo for you're a low down liar, Philpott) but the paper is quickly taking shape to the beat of the Hot Jaxs and are we whizzing. Ted Snider who has formerly led the Jaxs is stepping aside to let Gord Allison take the baton while Ted takes up his post as first trombone.

Well I guess this about all the gossip. Let's hear from you. How do you like the paper? Give us some constructive criticism. It would certainly bolster morale of The Varsity (all five of us) if we knew that somebody beside the proof-reader, read the paper.

Ajax Rumblings

RACKETS

Four tennis courts are now available and the students have taken advantage of the fine spring weather to brush up on their tennis playing.

WARM??

Spring has definitely come to Ajax as shown by an Architectural student who has rigged up a drafting table outdoors and doing work sans shirt.

HART HOUSE

Hart House is at last nearing completion. The Music Room was completed during the holidays and the Chapel will be finished in a week or so.

BEAT ME DADDY

By the sound of the music?? heard last night while an attempt was made to get the Varsity to press, it seems as if the "Hot Jaxs" were having a jam session again.

YEA TEAM!

The Ajax Rugby Team in the fall should be very well trained considering all the practising that is going on between the residences.

story brings you. The King of Lydia, the ribes, and Leonidas handle the humor.

The episode takes place for the most part in 4th century B.C. Lydia about 550 B.C. using the reign of Croesus. The latter part, taken by Thomas Gomez, was rather different from the roles he usually takes since he was engaged in, but foreshadowing the entire picture. At the aising of the curtain the humor starts with the modern wolfishness of the scribes displayed as ladies of the court enter the palace. Some lovely extras wade in the aquarium as they polish the goldfish in housecleaning preparation for the arrival of lushious Merle Oberon as the Persian Princess. A kibitha enters the court and the lovely princess arrives to become the wife of the ugly but fabulously rich Croesus. Aesop also makes his appearance at this time and the princess saves his life in order that he may amuse her with his fables. Aesop, Turhan Bey, disguised as an old hunchback eventually steals her heart when she sees him out of his tattered cloths.

Attosa, a sorceress and queen of a neighboring country had hoped to marry Croesus. She is infuriated because he had swindled her on a deal. She appears in one scene and the remainder of the picture she is seen only as an apparition. You'll want to know how Aesop and Delaral escape with their lives when Croesus finds out that they are in love and the only way to know this is to see the picture "A Night In Paradise."

"KITTY"

Kitty . . . Paulette Goddard Sir Hugh Marcy . . . Ray Milland Duke of Malmunster . . . Reginald Owen Thomas Gainsborough . . . Cecil Earl of Carstairs . . . Patrick Knowles Lady Susan . . . Constance Collier And Others . . .

The daring novel that has emotionalized thousands now becomes a double daring screen hit (but of course some of the spice has been removed). You will learn how a girl from the slums of London becomes a lady and a duchess. She is but a "guttersnipe" as Sir Hugh calls her at the beginning but in the end she is the envy of all London, from a begging uncouthed urchin to a lovely duchess, the Duchess of Malmunster. Miss Goddard excels any other part she has played in the past when she portrays Kitty from the book by the same name.

Academy Award winner, Ray Milland as Sir Hugh and Constance Collier as Lady Susan are the ones who take on the job of teaching

Kitty to be a lady but it is only after the artist, Gainsborough, found out what beauty was hidden under the rags he found her in. Since they were in heavy debt they decided to have her marry some wealthy lord and the dowry would go to them. An unfortunate circumstance for the husband ends his life and Kitty is left with a moderate sum (£40,000).

She then wants to marry Sir Hugh but he had other plans for her. He then made plans for her marriage to the Duke of Malmunster and so have his position in the Foreign Office reinstated. When Kitty had a baby the Duke is very happy but he does not know that it is not really his son. Since he is getting on in age the excitement of the child's birth is too much for him and he dies. Kitty now inherits many estates and much money. The Earl of Carstairs, a school chum of Sir Hugh, asks Kitty to marry him and she accepts him after she has a disagreement with Sir Hugh.

It is after this that Sir Hugh realizes how much he loves her and he attempts to break up the forthcoming marriage by exposing her true identity. He brings Old Meg, the woman for whom Kitty worked in Houndsditch, to tell Carstairs about her. He still wants to marry her but she realizes that Sir Hugh loves her at last and she marries him.

"MARIE LOUISE"

At the International Cinema, (Yonge, South of Eglinton), Torontonians have something new in the entertainment field. It is the policy of this newly opened theatre to present the best of the foreign field along with American and British films that are "different".

"Marie Louise" was a happy choice for an opener. The story holds the interest, the technical work is of a high standard and the sub-titles are sufficient to get across all the necessary dialogue.

It will probably come as a surprise to the majority of readers, to learn of a highly developed film in Switzerland. Of course, they have at hand all the scenery necessary but their scope must be limited by an overdose of mountains as backdrop.

Marie Louise was a French girl from Rouen. Her mother managed to get her into Switzerland for a three months' vacation from war at about the time that France fell. The family she was supposed to live with was quarantined for measles, and Marie Louise was taken to the home of the local mill owner, a small town truant. She soon won his heart and became one of the family to such an extent that when the time came for her to return to France she did not want to leave.

The authenticity of this film is aided by the fact that all the actors are unknown to English-speaking audiences. All parts are played to perfection and without the artificial gloss so common to Hollywood productions. The romance angle is played down and although this could be considered a war picture, the enemy never appears.

On the same programme there is a Russian short with English dialogue dubbed in. At times the dialogue is hard to follow through the English accent of the speaker. The short, "Land of Toys", should be amusing to any engineer under the age of ten.

EVERYDAY WASHDAY AT CAMPUS LAUNDRY

Editor's Note:—

In our last issue before Easter we printed only a small part of a feature article on our Ajax Laundry, under the heading "Every Day a Wash Day." In this issue we are printing the complete story.

By Owen J. Lemyre

On a bright sunny afternoon when soft fluffy clouds float on high and students were relaxing after a most exasperating examination someone was roaming through the Aax laundry building number 701 on a tour of investigation. Those of you who were not completely fatigued may have been cut enjoying your favorite sports of baseball or touch rugby while the laundry building tour was on.

The manager of the laundry, Mr. T. Wheeler, pointed to many features of interest in the well-equipped emporium. Amongst the many pieces of interesting paraphernalia there were also some very attractive young ladies. The tour was not exactly to see the girls who work there but it didn't hurt to look over in their direction once in a while.

When you enter the building you are not surprised to find the place exceptionally clean as well as perfectly organized. The washing section is on the right hand side of the room. There is a large Cascade washer some four feet in diameter and twelve feet long with a capacity of 300 pounds per batch. This amount is washed in just thirty minutes. In this washer only white goods and fast coloured goods are laundered as there is a special small washer for sweaters that may have their colours run.

The clothes go from the washers to the centrifugal driers where they are almost dried. This centrifuge travels at about 800 r.p.m. and at this velocity most of the water is thrown out of the clothes. The next process is the complete drying in a hot air whirling drum. Socks are not dried in this way but are done on steam heated stocking forms. This prevents shrinkage. A careful examination at this time shows up holes and they are repaired free of charge.

When the goods come from the drier they go to girls who iron them on steam presses. Shirts require special attention and are finished by a hand iron. All institutional laundry such as sheets are done on a large flat work ironer and hundreds can be done an hour. This laundry is run by a staff of 20 capable and efficient workers whose motto is "Keep Clean".

There is considerable chemistry connected with the work in this establishment. When a batch of clothing is put into the washer the next job is to mix the washing solution. It does not contain just soap and water but a multitude of other ingredients. Fifty gallons of water is the first of these, then two quarts of a 1% sodium hypo chloride (NaOCl) is added, this being used only as a disinfectant. The next one of the compounds to be used is sodium silicate (xNa2O.ySiO2) which is used as detergent in making colours fast. Caustic soda (NaOH) is also mixed with the latter and a mixture of the two are put into the original in the proportions of three pounds to 50 gallons of water. The last ingredient to be added is trisodium phosphate (Na3PO4.12H2O) used to soften water. Soap is then added in the form of powder in order to get a faster reaction in suds. The latter chemical compound mentioned is also used to cut grease. Bleuing is used for a whiter wash. The remarkable record the laundry has is no loss claims since it began operating. This is due to the efficient system of checking and re-checking and the use of code names

Hart House Art Committee Meeting

At the first meeting of the Hart House Art Committee on Monday evening J. R. McLaurin was elected secretary.

The committee agreed that it would be desirable to formally open the Music Room with a first rate recital. A sub-committee was elected to discuss the matter with Sir Ernest MacMillan who is the Faculty member of Hart House, Toronto.

An art exhibition by the Fine Arts Class of the University will be hung in Hart House common room.

The Sketch Club will hold an outdoor meeting on Thursday evening, weather permitting. Members and potential members are requested to gather in the Music Room at six p.m.

The Glee Club will meet at 5:15 this evening in the Music Room. Consideration will be given to ideas for the coming presentation.

ity which appeals to them and which can become a very profitable hobby.

Perhaps you are interested in some of the boys in the band. Here they are in order of instrument:

1st. trumpet, Johnny Conrad of Waterloo Ont.—a sweet trumpet man who will go places in the music business; 2nd. trumpet, Ron Hall—Ron is a good man and is also active in athletics; 3rd. trumpet, Ken Nishi, who brings out that third harmony; John Farrell who boards in the village doubles on third; 1st trombone is yours truly who knows nothing in particular, especially about writing newspaper articles; 2nd. trombone, Don Euler—that handsome chap in the back row; 1st. alto sax, Redge Shaw—no relation to Artie, but a good lead man just the same; next is Irv Weinberg on 2nd. tenor, a terrific trumpet man Irv is an ex-navy bandsman and has played with several Toronto dance bands; on 3rd. alto we have Wes Jackson, the guy with that hungry look in his eye in the front row; 4th. tenor has been a problem, apparently there is no other tenor man on the campus and Jim Morrison has been substituting on his clarinet; our drummer is Ed Green a Toronto boy who plays a good steady beat and is not too loud; Gard Allison plays piano for us, he has been playing classic all music for some time and has finally graduated to the higher plane of popular music.

Just a word on popular vs. classical! There are of course extremists in both cases. Personally I enjoy both and believe that no matter what you prefer it is best as long as you get most enjoyment out of it. That is what I think music is for—individual enjoyment. There are many parallels between popular and classical music, both in mood and in execution. In fact you cannot beat some of the technicalities that you run up against in modern music.

This article I hope will give you chaps out here at Ajax an idea as to what we do and why we do it. If there are any musicians who can fill our positions come around to our practice on Monday evenings either in Hart House or the "Rec" hall. See you there, and don't forget the "hit" tune of today is the classic of tomorrow!

With all respect to Brahms, Bach and Beethoven,

Observatory Now Open

President Sidney Smith announces that the David Dunlap Observatory at Richmond Hill—the University of Toronto's Observatory—has now been opened to the public after being closed for the duration of World War II.

Every Wednesday afternoon throughout the year interested persons may visit the observatory from 2:00-4:00 p.m.

On Sunday afternoon the observatory will be open to the public for two hours, commencing at 2:00 p.m. and on Saturday evenings from April 1 to October 31, the public will be admitted for two hours, commencing one half hour after sunset.

Weather permitting, astronomical objects may be viewed through the telescope on Saturday evenings. Arrangements for the visits of groups of ten or more may be made through the Department of University Extension.

cipline and they could be trusted with top secrets."

She paid tribute to women who did not wear uniforms, but who played an important part in helping to win the war.

"The general feeling of women, on leaving the service was that while they did not like everything, yet they would not have missed the experience for the world."

Dr. Sinclair made an appeal for more recognition of women and an equality of footing with men in community affairs.

In conclusion she predicted that the service women now attending the Universities would tax the universities' intellectual and spiritual resources and will take the many lessons learned from life into the classrooms and will make a contribution to the development of the universities.

"The University can discharge best its debt by giving them a consciousness of their obligation to society," she concluded.

General Montague To Be Honoured

During the Convocation Dr. Cody announced that it had been the intention of the university to honour General Montague with the others but that he was unable to be present and the University of Toronto would confer the degree upon him at a later date. Dr. Cody recalled performing the marriage ceremony for General Crerar and his wife who was present among the distinguished guests. He also expressed his pleasure to have Captain Adelaide Sinclair back, and offered his congratulations to Cardinal McGuigan.

during the Easter holiday, a quantity of tools were uncovered. The cache included a hammer, a file and a number of probing instruments. This has led to the belief that Fydel was experimenting in the dental field. It has further been disclosed that his patient or victim was a small dog belonging to a member of the faculty. This follows on the statement made before the holiday that Uranium U-2392 would be invaluable to dentists as filler.

CHESS MESS

A. Nathan

What becomes of chess champs? It was this question and others like it which prompted us to conduct an investigation into the depths of chess. After interviewing the inmates of several asylums a representative group was found harboured in the Ajax Chess Club.

The Chess club has gone into full swing and now boasts 35 drooling maniacs. The members are easily recognized from typical student cases by the flemish gleam in their eyes.

By special permission an interview was arranged with Chess Champ Ajax, Andy Matthews.

Chess is a game both mentally stimulating and of untold interest, said Matthews, as he was released from his cage. The last 2 chess champs of the world have been professors of mathematics, he continued, burning the moustache of his interviewer with his warm breath. "In fact," he continued, locking the door and turning the light. "It is one of the best devices for developing the imagination."

And so the interview continued by the phosphorescent glow of the chess-board as Andrews narrated one of his gambits.

"The stroke was justified," he said solemnly, to lose a queen for a knight. After all, once a queen always a queen, but once a knight is lost try again!

Dunc Marshall, zealous secretary of the club said, I know of no better game for mental enjoyment," as he gayly tore down his Varga pin-ups.

However, these glowing opinions of chess are not universal. Leo Buhta, fanatically anti-chess cruof Reading Gael, which simply proves how completely real tragedy escapes a writer of Wilde's type. The famous personality, which was supposed to infuse and transform all Wilde's work, even that directly borrowed from better writers, is revealed as tawdry, briefly colourful and utterly unimportant.

Wilde, then, is a minor writer, the fitting hero of a minor school. That he might have been greater is possible; but he would have required, first of all, a sense of that responsibility without which no writer can be either serious or important. With a quiet sigh, we can afford to leave him in peace.

sader," retorted, "Chess is a game over 2500 years old and smells like it. Nevertheless, chess is gaining even more popularity despite its conation of being an old man's game. Ajax engineers are turning from X's and O's to chess."

The beginner is often bewildered by the experienced player who always falls asleep or knocks over the board when stuck in a difficult position.

"Chess," said Keith MacGregor explaining its universal appeal carries one away from his insignificance in the world, to the imaginative world where he is the general of a large army. His fortune of war depends upon his own mental abilities."

This is borne out by the fact that many Russian generals (including Timoshenko) are good chess players."

self short. During the winter rug cutters have enjoyed Hallman at "The Castle" but for the passed couple of weeks Kenney has been on the stand; he hasn't been "on the beam" though. Fortunately it was only a temporary measure and Stan Patton will be there for the summer. The latter has been playing at The Brant Inn and it will be the first time he has played at The Castle for a season. Let's see how good he is. The band at The Castle is now very good since Mart Kenney gave way to Stan Patton and his boys. The orchestra is one of the best in this district and as well as being "hot" musicians they are also musical comedians. There is a broadcast from The Castle every Saturday night. An enormous crowd is always present there and for the most part you can "bank" on a pleasant evening of dancing in the former dining room of Sir Henry Palette.

Hart House Committee Meeting Wednesday

The Ajax Hart House Committee met Wednesday at five p.m. in the General Office, Hart House to discuss the functions of the committee improving the House facilities and plans for the future.

Professor Waddell took up the reigns as chairman of the new committee and introduced Mr. Gilles the Director of Ajax, and Mr. Emond.

Before actual business was discussed Roy Jones was elected secretary. Mr. McCammon introduced the first item of business on the agenda by announcing that the Architects requested the facilities in Hart House to sponsor a dance for the Architects on May 10. This request was unanimously granted. The dance according to McCammon will be held in the Music Room. This brought up the point of whether or not Hart House will be available to undergraduates of the School for Social week-end Functions. The opinion of the committee was that Hart House was for the student body and the motion was passed, stipulating that dancing would be held only on Fridays and Saturdays.

Jim Vann and Morley Horton were invited to sit in on the opening meeting to discuss proper methods of running Saturday night dances. Jim and Morley started these dances and now it was thought by them and the Hart House Committee that the burden should be taken off their shoulders and born by the Hart House Committee. Under the recommendation of these men, the Committee decided to hold a Saturday night dance every third week commencing May 10.

The Committee expressed their wish for a formal dance in the Toronto Hart House about June 10. Ted Snyder's motion that a juke box be placed in the Hart House Snack Bar was defeated. It was felt by most members that there were enough record players in the residences to satisfy the student desire for popular music and that a juke box in Hart House would just act as a background of noise to conversation.

Mr. Emond raised for Pete Philpott the question of loaning Ajax Hart House equipment. A number of residences have expressed their wish to borrow a piano for Resident Social affairs. The committee thought it inadvisable to start this practice as it would start a precedent and the piano would hardly ever be in Hart House.

The meeting convened at 5:15 and adjourned at 8:15. Supper was served at Arbour Lodge.

Society's School Dinner In June

Monday night the Engineering Society held a general meeting in the faculty board room.

The main business of the meeting was the arrangements for the Ajax School Dinner which will be held in the cafeteria sometime in June. Speakers for the event were not announced.

Ted Hodgson reported that all possible effort was being made to get sidereels for the stores. Keuffel and Esser are unable to deliver because of a shortage of materials. A special move was being made which may bring results in six weeks.

It was announced that the CNR stop their flyer at 5:45 (DST) each Friday. They are also contemplating a special Diesel train which would come from Toronto early (2:30) Saturday and Sunday morning. Grey Coach will augment their service with a bus Friday at 5:15.

A report was given of the first Engineering Society Council meeting which was held last week in Toronto. The new constitution, for the purpose of correlating the Ajax and Toronto Societies, is waiting approval from the Faculty. Through Ajax representative Gord Beatty Skule social events for next year have been planned. It is expected that they will be of sufficient size and number that everyone who wants to attend will be able to do so.

It was drawn to the attention of the executive that the expenses for the Athletic funds were being paid for from society funds.

A vote of thanks was given to Jim Vann and Morley Horton for their good work in organizing the Saturday Night Dances. "Hart House will have a hard time maintaining their high standards," said Mike McAuliffe.

Additional Houses

The S.A.C. Office has announced that a limited number of offers of housing accommodation have been received from Oshawa and district. Interested persons are to contact the S.A.C. Office in Hart House.

The offers were received in answer to an advertisement in The Oshawa Times-Gazette. As the accommodation is strictly limited, prospective customers are advised to call at the earliest possible date.

ATTENTION! . . . THOSE INTERESTED IN REPORTING FOR "THE VARSITY"

There will be a meeting of The Varsity Staff and those interested. The meeting will be held in the Music Room of Hart House at 8:00 p.m., Tuesday, May 7.

Mr. Gregory Clarke, writer for the "Toronto Daily Star" will speak.

TRANSPORT

On Friday, May 3rd, there will be an extra bus leaving at 5:15 p.m. All busses will leave from in back of York Hall. The times of departure will be 4:15, 5:15 and 6:15 p.m.

The train from Montreal to Toronto will stop at the Ajax station at 5:45 p.m.

All persons who purchase tickets in Toronto and who intend to travel on the special buses leaving Ajax at the above times are requested to inform the ticket vendors on duty in Hart House Tuck Shop on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays so that arrangements can be made in ordering the required number of vehicles. Failure to do so has resulted in many persons being forced to stand.

In future tickets will be sold at the bus stop only after all those holding tickets are seated.

Professional Engineers Will Advise Students

On Wednesday afternoon, the President of the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers, Professor G. R. Lord, and the Director of Information and Publicity, Colonel Thomas Medland visited Ajax and addressed a large number of students in the Recreation Hall.

Professor Lord, who holds degrees from the University of Toronto Faculty of Science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and other universities abroad, was introduced to the students by Professor W. J. T. Wright, Director of Studies.

The President, in his remarks, sketched the history and the importance of the Society, remarking that in 1922 the Province of Ontario Legislature passed a bill requiring anyone setting himself up as an engineer in Ontario to hold membership in the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers.

It was a vigorous and growing body and in 1937, the Act was amended and brought up to date. Another amendment was made in 1945.

The society has appointed a committee to study the problem of job evaluation which suggested the salaries be paid to various members of a community on the basis of points. These points would be based on education required, experience, and responsibility held, thus the matter of remuneration would be taken away from fancy and put on a scientific basis.

Qualifications for members were outlined. Usually one must be a graduate of a university with one year's experience. However there were members who were not university graduates but who had attained the required standards by passing examinations during years of practical experience. These examinations were set by university professors and were very difficult. In his estimation, such men were worthy of membership as it required much stamina and hard work for the practical man to be able to reach the standard.

Professor Lord then introduced Col. Medland, the Director of Information and Publicity. He explained what his committee had accomplished. During his visits to firms advertising in their magazine, he checked to find out how many registered engineers were employed. In some cases non-registered engineers were filling engineers positions. In these cases he strongly advised the employment of registered men; there were some exceptional cases however; cases where the position was filled by a man who had served the firm for a number of years and who was quite competent. "Such men," he continued, "we felt that they should be allowed to remain, but their positions, on retirement, should be filled by registered men."

Col. Medland advised that the problem of obtaining jobs should begin now. He also said that the question of courtesy and submission to one's superiors was an important one and cited one case where one young man missed the opportunity in a very promising position.

In conclusion he explained the mechanics of the society, stating that there were full members who were graduates and had one year's experience; there was also a membership for engineer-in-training and who could by enclosing with their application form the sum of

OBSERVATORY OBSERVATIONS

By ED. SOKOLOWSKI

The study of heavenly bodies (astronomy that is) is a very interesting pursuit and many have made astronomical research their life work. Stars are not only of interest to the well-known astrologers but to astronomers who use them to aid in scientific discoveries. All astronomy tables used in air and sea navigation are drawn up at the observatories by astronomers.

One of the largest observatories in Canada is the David Dunlap Observatory, 8 miles north of the city limits of Toronto. This magnificent gift was donated to the University of Toronto by Mrs. Jessie Donald Dunlap as a memorial to her husband, David Alexander Dunlap.

The main optical element of the telescope is the 74-inch mirror. It is 12 inches thick and weighs nearly 2½ tons. The upper surface of the mirror is ground and polished to a concave optical surface. The concavity is about 1 inch deep at the centre and is accurate to within two 1/1,000,000 of an inch. This surface is coated with a thin highly-reflecting layer of aluminum.

The tube which holds this mirror is an open framework to permit free circulation of air. The illumination from the stars enters the tube and is reflected by the mirror, which is situated at the bottom of the tube, up the tube to a smaller secondary mirror and in turn this reflects the light from the star through the 7-inch hole drilled through the center of the main mirror. The stars are then viewed through an eyepiece below the larger mirror, or the light can be analyzed through a spectrograph at the bottom of the telescope.

The telescope is mounted on two axis at right angles to each other and one of these is parallel to the earth's axis. This permits the telescope to be set to any part of the sky. A clock turns the telescope through one revolution in twenty-four hours, thus enabling the telescope to move with the star to which it is set.

A 61-foot-diameter hemispherical dome houses the telescope and for observations a slit, 15 feet wide, is used. The whole dome which weighs about 80 tons can be rotated so the slit can be lined up with the line of sight of the telescope. When the telescope is not in use two large shutters close the opening.

The three fields in which research work is carried on at the Observatory are: the study by photography of the spectra of the stars, the direct photography of selected clusters of stars, and the study of meteors with small cameras. The spectroscopic studies are used to measure the speed at which stars approach and recede from the earth, to check the conditions of the atmosphere of the stars and the motions of double stars. The direct photographs are used to study the variations in the light of the stars and from this to calculate the distance to selected objects.

The Administration Building houses offices, apparatus for measuring places, an astronomical library, a lecture room and a machine shop. At present only the southern of the three domes is being used. This contains a 19-inch reflector, built by Dr. R. K. Young and donated by him to the University of Toronto.

My Roommate

After a very successful day at lectures (having learned that alpha was the beginning of the Greek alphabet) I was returning to the shack feeling very happy and singing the "Tolke Oike".

As I entered the hut my eardrums were pierced by a very frightful screech which gave me a terrific shock such as a fellow gets when he enters the mess-hall on Fridays and the fish smacks his smelling senses. After a few minutes of trying to calm down, I doffed my chapeau in respect, as the noise sounded like the boys were playing a joke on the cat, that made its home here to keep the fellows in company on weekends, by skinning it alive. I felt a little sorry for the cat as I thought he was good company and I like cats. I walked down the hall a little when again I heard a nauseating screech, only this time louder. A few tears formed in my eyes and I said a prayer for the cat for the second screech sounded as if the boys had taken the cat's ninth life. I became annoyed at this and thought it was my duty to report this to the "Be Kind to Dumb Animals" club or the Engineering Society.

As I opened the door to my suite I was thrown back into the hall by a terrifying noise that made my stomach do "Dinghy Drill". My roommate came out and helped me up. I took one swing at him, cursed, swore, calling him all names I could remember as I thought he was the one playing the joke on the cat. He calmed me down and asked me in a quiet soothing voice, "What cat?"

Then I looked about the room only to find no cat. Was my face red? I explained that I thought he was the rat who was torturing the cat. Climbing into my pit my roommate picked up a long black instrument covered with do-dads. It looked like a licorice stick, but he informed me it was a clarinet. Never having feared my eyes on same I didn't argue the point. Then I asked him what it was for.

He informed me he actually made music with it. At this I was very happy being a music lover and asked him to play my favourite songs, being "I Love You Truly" and "Jesus Loves Me" because these two songs made me very sentimental and reminded me of my mother-in-law. He said he would be very happy to oblige me and he placed one of the stick to his lips.

The next thing I knew an infernal noise agonizing to my hearing screeched into my aural organs. I rushed next door to see if the boys in the next room were playing with the cat but all I found was an empty study room. Coming back and apologizing to my roommate for the rude interruption I asked him to furnish me with my request. Being a "Gentleman of a Learned Profession" I was interested in the gadgets on the black object and watched him as he started to blow. Well,.....

I sat up slowly, feeling very ashamed of myself for accusing the boys with playing with the cat. Now I'm a man of strong character and will-power and I like to see young men like my roommate progress, BUT it is an almost losing battle to fight the impulse which makes me want to end my roommate's misery and prevent him from completing his course in Engineering at the same time to bring peace and quiet to our home and neighbours.

As I said before, I like music and I won't stand in the way of development of genius, so the best thing to do is to get a transfer, even to that abominable place, the Toronto Campus.

Professional Association

If the building of the Egyptian pyramids indicates that engineering is one of the oldest of the arts, it is also one of the youngest professions.

It was not until 1922, when the Ontario Legislature passed a bill requiring a man to be a member of the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers in order to practise in the Province of Ontario that the province succeeded in bringing this old and established art to the status of a profession within its borders.

Before this time, anyone could call himself an engineer, without any proper qualification or measure of his competence. Indeed, many were of the same class as charlatans in medicine.

The Association has the responsibility of safeguarding the public from this type of interloper, and examines the qualification of each man who applies for membership before giving him the stamp of its approval.

The day when the first year student will attain the goal for which he or she has striven through four years of hard grind seems at first to be very remote; to be thinking about the day when he or she will be seeking employment may even seem premature. Nevertheless, the long road ahead does come to an end and all too quickly and thoughtful students are concerned with the prospects of employment which lie ahead.

At times they are appalled by the thought of the number of graduate engineers released at the time of their graduation. What will be their chances of obtaining a position when 1400 from Ajax and many more from Toronto, not to mention the increased number of graduates from the other campuses across Canada flood the market?

"What will they do with all of us when we do get out?" is the frequently asked question, when many "bull" sessions get going. It is a question which indicates the thoughtful concern of many Jacksman.

When Professor Lord, President, and Colonel Medland, Director of Publicity, of the Association were asked that question the other day during their visit to Ajax, they were very optimistic.

Both felt that there would be many openings. Each year many engineers reach the retiring age when they would normally resign and leave a vacancy to be filled. During the war however, those reaching that age were forced to continue in harness, and postpone their day of retirement, as there were no replacements available while the graduates were being taken by the armed forces.

Each year saw an increasing number of potential retirements, pending the release of numbers of young men. It was their opinion that within a few years the demand would be sufficient to absorb the supply.

In a year from now, the summer of 1947, with three months' vacation before then, the army of student engineers will be seeking temporary employment, either with private firms or with government surveys. Many of those will upon graduation find their careers in these firms.

The foresighted student will be desirous of information about the Association and from the Association. Many questions will arise in his mind.

"How do I make contacts with the persons or firms in which I am interested," he may want to know.

Besides there are many students who have a number of years in the service and who can no longer be classed as "young" men. Many firms are interested only in taking on young men and these men may be desirous of the effect of this attitude upon their future.

It is these questions and many others which the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers can answer. For this purpose they are sending Col. Medland to Ajax on Monday afternoons and evenings.

In sending a representative to us for consultation, they have shown their interest in our welfare. It is now up to us to show that we too are interested. We can do this by availing ourselves of their service. In doing this we are certain to have the backing of a very powerful force working in our interests.

Hope For The Novel?

By ROBERT WEAVER

The current issue of Time Magazine contains the information that "In the first three months of 1946, six new novels had each run up a score of more than half a million copies on the presses or in print." On the whole, the more reliable reviewers have not been impressed by this crop of best-sellers. Publishers and advertising directors, we may assume, have disagreed with the critics; what the public thinks is apparently of no importance.

Now it seems reasonable to assume that the novel is the literary form most readily adaptable to the vast complexities of our present society. Poems and short stories occupy an important place, of course, but aside from the question of their limited range, there is the problem of their restricted appeal.

Unfortunately the novel, thanks to the movies, the book clubs, and the lending libraries, is the most easily corrupted of contemporary creative literature. Money is the source of the disease, and many writers are themselves among the most eager carriers of the corruption. The mass-circulation magazines are twisting the short story. Poetry remains the least corrupted and from the point of view of mass appeal, most ineffective branch of literature.

The critic need only consider the two decades prior to this war to realize fully the extent of the novel's degradation. There were then literary "movements", violent debates, colourful and serious writers. Now a few of the older novelists remain, with their talents failing and their reputations at the mercy of press agents. There is no new movement of real merit discernible, although out of the welter of post-war Europe a new literary conception may be growing. In the United States the tragedy is most complete, and it is primarily this literature which affects Canada.

In suggesting a plan for young writers to consider, I am not attempting to lay down hard and fast regulations. It is simply that the young creative writer appears too frequently to have no guiding philosophy. He tends to accept a theory of literature growing from his work, his contacts and the suggestions of his advisers. Anyone is therefore free to suggest a tentative plan.

I have said that the novelist generally relates his work to no other ethical beliefs than those which gradually develop. What is more, these ethics are usually, and correctly, regarded as not so much a cause but an effect. The need of our writers is simply a definite and comparatively absolute ethical view of life as a whole, to which their work should be related as only one aspect of existence.

These ethics should not be allow-

Last Monday was the first organized baseball practice. Several outstanding players were noticed in attendance—Sedgley, Dotty, Rosen, Bill Spence and Ken Mohun were just a few of the better known athletes around the camp who played a solid game of baseball as well as other sports.

Yesterday saw the opening game in baseball. The bleachers were moderately filled. It looks as if this will be the popular game this season.

Paniersphere

Or to youse guys again—basketball. Last night I witnessed one of the finest exhibitions of excellent team work and good basketball (I'm not being paid) that has ever been at Ajax. The occasion was the semi-final basketball match between 730 and Jerry Sedgley's Commuters. Although Yoneyama's 730-A team won the contest with a score of 36 to 5, it does not indicate the close play that prevailed at the opening part of the game.

Torrens in my estimation really was the backbone of 730. This boy could save more shots on the basket and turn it into a scoring point. Don't think that I am saying that Torrens is the team, the team revolves about him like a well planned machine. While we are throwing on the goo I might as well throw a bouquet of dandelions to Andrassy also of 730 who played an all-round game. The Commuters deserve plenty of credit for coming as far as they did in the intramural contests. What I as well as many other sceptics wondered how these men could get together and put out a worth while team while commuting to and from Ajax. Well time has shown that it can be done. Both teams excelled in passing, and fast stepping. The outstanding (they all were) players on the Commuters were Sedgley and Lackstrom.

The police and guards of the D.I.L. and the Ajax campus are walking about the grounds with their chests sticking out displaying their new uniforms.

DOG-GONE

The Math Department are very fussy about who listens to their lectures. A little pup interested in the subject of "Conics" in Analytic Geometry was thrown out of the classroom by the lecturer who said the pup did not pay his tuition fees.

CUE-LESS

It seems that the Engineers spare time sport has ceased at Ajax since the Billiard Room has closed and will now be used as a lecture room. It is hoped that a new billiard room will be built in the near future only this time more centrally located.

MODELS?

Bed Time Tales For Dozy Dopes

By J. FYDELL

The Hare and The Tortoise.

It was a fine spring morning when Bunny Bugs started out for the big city in his new super deluxe streamlined 1950 jalopy. He was feeling very happy. The weather had something to do with it. His jalopy had something to do with it. But especially did Feluda Catalina Champus, of the Queen's Park Champuses, have something to do with it.

As he swooshed along at a velocity approaching that of one of them new X-rockets, he saw a speck on the blue horizon. Taking his foot off the accelerator, for in those days they still had accelerators, and thereby bringing his acceleration to zero, he observed upon closer inspection that the speck was his old friend, Turtle-necked Hank, ambling along in his rattling old 1946 crock and making more noise than six boiler factories.

Turning off the fuel valve and bringing the super deluxe streamlined jalopy down to zero velocity in relation to the rattling old 1946 crock, he called out, "Why don't you turn in that old crock and get a good one like mine?"

Now Turtle-necked Hank was proud of his 1946 crock even if it did rattle and make more noise than six boiler factories so after counting ten as his mother had taught him, he defiantly wiggled one ear and bellowed, "Them's fighting words, bub, and my crock can beat your jalopy any day of the week."

"Get a clue from the chesscloset, man," answered Bugs, "you know that you haven't the chance of an ice cube in a volcano, against my jalopy."

"At this point they were interrupted by the twang of Snerdimer Mort who drove by on a load of fish and chips. "Why don't youse guys both get a clue and settle your argument by the experimental method? Just because you have one of them there rip sporting new fangled contraptions you expect that you can do anything you like, Bugs. But it ain't so. I'll tell you what; next Saturday afternoon we'll have a race and I'm betting my last chip on Hank."

ed to harden into dogma; they should be constantly reconsidered and adapted to changing circumstances. They should, however, have an actuality beyond mere day by day living. We can no longer report life and hope for more than the confusion into which our society is plunging. The ethics must be there, they must be understood and valued, and they must then be used to inform and improve the creative efforts of the writer.

Hobby Shop

The Hobby Shop in the parking lot opposite the Residential Area lower gate is now open for use. The building has been completely renovated and is now equipped with lockers and work bench. The lights have been shifted around to give better lighting.

Keys for lockers and the club house may be obtained any time at the Hart House General Office. There will be a notice as to a meeting in the next issue of The Varsity.

"Now that the place has been modified we are in a good position to carry out a lot of activities," said Knox Hawkshaw, "the ball diamond offers excellent facilities for U-control, but as yet we haven't very much arranged for 'free flight'. However, if we all get together we should be able to dream up something."

Besides model aircraft, the building can handle leather—and woodcraft. At present there are few tools available, but if enough enthusiasm is shown there is the possibility of improving the building and getting more equipment.

Philadelphia Orchestra

The Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormond, performed two concerts in Massey Hall this week on the evenings of April 30 and May 1.

The Tuesday programme consisted of the Overture in D Minor by Handel as transcribed for orchestra by Mr. Ormond, Symphony No. 7 in A Major Opus 92 by Beethoven, two Nocturnes for Orchestra by Debussy and a Tone Poem "Death and Transfiguration" by Richard Strauss.

The orchestra played with a perfect technique, the most noticeable feature was the synchronism amongst the various sections. The precision of the violin sections undoubtedly was no small contributing factor to the great performance which brought forth the whole-hearted approval and applause of the near-capacity audience.

We were unable to attend the Wednesday performance but we have every reason to believe that it was as successful as the other.

The Wednesday programme contained a suite from the "Water Music" by George Frederic Handel. Mr. Ormond has rescored five of the original twenty movements and arranged them into a concert suite; Symphony No. 5 in E flat major Opus 82 by Jean Sibelius, first performed in America by the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1921 before a disapproving audience; Ballet music from "The Perfect Fool" by Gustav Holst, composed in England in 1918 and first performed in London in 1921. "The Perfect Fool" was a satirical opera directed against Italian and German operas of the Verdi and Wagner type.

The suite from the ballet "The Fire Bird" by Igor Fedorovich Stravinsky has been rewritten for orchestra by Stravinsky, nine years after the first performance.

"In the Lord Put I My Trust" written by Handel while he was Kappelmeister to the first Duke of Chondos was the source of the theme of the overture in D.

The symphony No. 7 was first performed at a concert for the wounded soldiers of the Battle of Tannenberg. This symphony has undergone much unfavourable criticism but is so powerful and consuming that its survival was predestined.

The Nocturnes consist of two of the three original Nocturnes by Debussy completed in 1899. The first is entitled "Clouds," the second "Festivals," and the third "Sirens." The last was not included in the programme. As the titles imply, "Clouds" is an impressionistic production depicting the vastness of the heavens and the slow passage of the clouds, while "Festivals" is a rhythmic interpretation of a festive procession.

"Death and Transfiguration" was written in 1888 and performed in 1890 at a concert by the Allzeimerer Deutscher Musikverein. The Poem depicts the struggle of a sick man with Death in a small dim room. The picture varies from the intense horrible struggle to the quiet moments of rest when the man falls back. His life passes before him and he dies. He achieves in Heaven what he wanted on Earth, "Deliverance and Transfiguration."

Paintings And Paint Rags

The question in every student's mind as he dashes terror-stricken from the Hart House is: "What will they think about next?"

This week, those students whose artistic conceptions were perverted by the weird versions of abstract art in the Hart House will have a chance to rest their numbed senses on a more traditional selection.

Surrealist art was born (and now thrives) 20 years ago, as modern art. How or why nobody knows but possibly the title of this article may have some bearing on it?

An engineer who is trained to be practical, no doubt has a different view towards art than an artisan. Yet painting, like music, is an art; and one must choose between classical music and jazz.

Mr. C. P. Brocket, amateur of art said, "A good picture ought to be well balanced, not only in grouping and tone, but also in colour and feeling. In my opinion bad art is that which portrays the subject unnaturally."

However, before we continue let us give abstract art the credit it is due. Modern art strives to translate on the canvas the artist's emotional and sensual feeling of the subject. This, I think, to some extent justifies the grotesque forms and pot-pourri geometric designs which art boldly contorted as "art." Nevertheless, it is not these digressions from the conventional form of art that I accuse as "guilty," but the more abstract style which have an end but have lost all coherence in form and structure. Mr. Brocket continued,

"Art is something I would like to live in. Abstract art, in my opinion, has a bad odour. Bad odours may have their merits but not in Art. Whether abstract art is art at all only time will tell. Good art lasts through the centuries."

And so let the case rest. If civilization does deteriorate to such an extent that surrealism is the word, remind me to hand in my kindergarten "studies."

The first year animal-life section was very skillfully done but the animals themselves lacked lifelessness. Yet the work was promising.

The second year art was characterized by tone and form. Good style was revealed in the picture composition.

The third year art featured delicacy and colour. The wall paper designs ingeniously adopted natural objects as a theme.

Fourth year art, typified by, The Crap Game, revealed genuine professional qualities and mastery. There were of course several pictures of the traditional subject (the nude). The artists all copied from the same model but drew their backgrounds from imagination. In some cases, it was cynically suggested the nude also was drawn from imagination.

"The art display," said Mr. Emond, Director of Hart House, "is the most interesting we've yet received in the scope of form and design. The assorted array, from still life to abstract form, does credit to the School of Fine Art and to its instructor, John Hall who had a showing here a few weeks ago."

Mr. Emond also pointed out that we are fortunate in having the Common Room with lighting and wall background that lend themselves to the exhibition of art. This is not the case in Toronto where the lighting fixtures are not so modern.

So today sees another art display under the scrutiny of Ajacks eyes. Incidentally, "Does you thinks its stinks?"

Saves space, doesn't it?

The tennis courts are being constantly worked upon so don't despair because the ball bounces in a hypobolistic function of the tangent to a pussy dogs left ear. (It doesn't make sense, but did Problem Twenty?) If you had been wandering down past the courts yesterday you might have seen them being watered in preparation to rolling. What we need is a good rain fall. The tapes are now on all courts and so all &@&-?!; (!) (can't think of another word for court and repetition is bad) are ready for use. According to the Athletic Office all "thingamabobs" (Courts) will be resurfaced in the near future.

Dandelions Destroyed for Science

What a pity that Harbour Lodge will be lacking their share of dandelion punch (shall we say). A bulldozer has been hard at work digging up the ground north and east of Harbour Lodge to prepare it for the new Ajax Football Field. Floor Show Feature, 734 Is Host To Toronto Gals

Last Friday the boys in 734 played the part of hosts to a group of about 20 girls from the Elizabeth Arden Salon in Simpson's and the Imperial Optical Company in Toronto as well as a number of girls from Oshawa, in a dance held in the common room of their residence.

Soft lights and music as well as the original decoration consisting of a cut-out paper doll in the north-west corner of the room lent a festive atmosphere to the occasion.

The dance was the residence's first social event in the second term. Among the guests present from the campus were Mr. R. H. Perry, Superintendent of Residences, and Mr. Blackmore, Assistant to the director of Ajax.

During the evening Mr. M. McAuliffe, prominent ex-radar mechanic (R.C.A.F.) gave a demonstration in trouble shooting procedure when the sound system became un-serviceable.

A floor show, consisting of a number of acts including some sleight of hand and levitation by Baron Von Ignacy Alouyouious Leopoldus Stanislaw Sokolowski, Jr., from Upper Slobovia, while Pifi Carmaime from Montreal gave a dance accompanied by the music of a violin and waste paper basket. The imitation of a strip-tease by this scantily dressed member of the entertainment committee contributed much to the evening's entertainment. Mr. Ron Miles acted as M.C.

About 10:45 the dancers broke off to partake of doughnuts, milk and cokes, and the guests sat around chatting with their hosts while the floor show was presented.

At the conclusion of the evening, Miss Jean Brown, in charge of the girls expressed their appreciation and thanked the boys for the fine time. Mr. R. Bruce Nelson voiced the opinion that even with the shortage of girls the fellows enjoyed themselves. Mr. R. F. Clark thanked those who had helped through their efforts at decorating to make the dance a success.

Panic... Everywhere! As Editor Tears Hair

By OWEN J. LEMYRE

No one, except the faithful few who write regularly for The Varsity, knows just how much panic rages in the little office where the paper is written and made-up. When the staff go into the office on the night of going to press they are seldom lucky enough to have any articles ready for publication. They do, of course, go into the office on other nights besides the night of going to press but they have very little time to do their homework and also write.

It would be an easy task to fill the paper if every one interested would write a few lines for each issue. Very little of any one's time would be taken up if every one took his turn at writing. We know there are only a few girls on our campus but we would welcome them on our staff.

It is on "the night of nights" that the office is filled with the chatter of typewriters, the smell of burning wood (the boys thinking) and the ringing of telephones. Usually there are a few notes lying about and the staff set to work to build these into stories. Some six or seven members of the various departments of the paper sit busily at the chatter machines working frantically to complete some articles in time to catch the nine-thirty bus for Oshawa. A certain amount of material must be in the hands of the printers early in the evening. If you cannot write but can type, come in and help us that way.

At present The Varsity is written by a handful of editors and reporters who must study and also try to publish for your enjoyment and amusement in the form of the tabloid you all know so well. On several occasions in the past the paper has made an appeal for those interested in joining the staff. There is always a good turnout and after their names are taken and the meeting is adjourned the permanent staff neither sees nor hears anything further from them. The editor wants news, the staff makes news. It is most difficult to fill the paper with interesting and authentic news if there is no one to gather such facts as are necessary to compile an article. If you have no time to write the particular piece of news you have happened to come by then simply jot down a few notes and hand them into The Varsity office when you are over in Hart House. If there is no one in the office you can leave the notes in one of the baskets, or if the door is locked slide them under it.

The editor, Jim Fydel, will lose no more hair if you co-operate with him and his staff in this little service. It is your paper and if you want it to continue you must help to supply it with news. There will be a meeting of all those interested in this work tonight in the Music Room in Hart House at eight o'clock. The guest speaker will be the world famous journalist and newspaper correspondent Gregory Clark. A very interesting and instructive evening is planned for those interested in journalism.

Recruiting Date For Farm Labor

The Ontario Farm Service Force meeting will be held on Wednesday, May 15, instead of Wednesday, May 8 as was formerly announced. On this date Mr. A. W. McLaren, director of the Force, will speak with all Ajax students who are interested in working on farms during the late Summer vacation. The meeting will be held in the Recreation Hall at 8:00. Mr. McLaren will give full particulars regarding living quarters, rates of pay, and other details of farm life. Applications may be made at this meeting.

Journalists' Jamboree

The meeting of the staff of The Varsity in the music room of Hart House tonight at 8:00 p.m. will be open to any students who wish to attend to hear Mr. Gregory Clark, well known journalist, lecturer and war correspondent who is going to speak.

A short period of the meeting will be devoted to business in connection with The Varsity and anyone interested in writing is asked to attend.

There is no course in journalism given by the University of Toronto except the experience provided by The Varsity. However in the past many who during their undergraduate days worked for the paper have obtained good positions in the field of journalism speaks well for the training which they have received.

The experience may prove useful even to prospective engineers who some day may find themselves in positions where experience in journalism will prove itself invaluable.

Coming Events

V.C.F.

The V.C.F. will meet at 7 p.m. in the committee room, this coming Thursday. The topic for discussion will be "What we can do for God".

OFFICIAL OPENING

The Music Room of Hart House will be officially opened on May 23 during a concert at which Sir Ernest MacMillan and Rie Spivak will be present.

Luncheon Guest

FIELD MARSHAL ALEXANDER

His Excellency, Field Marshal Sir Arthur Alexander, Canada's new Governor-General will visit the University of Toronto on Thursday May 23, where he will attend a special luncheon in his honour at Hart House.

Invitations will be extended to a limited number of Ajax students. Those wishing to attend are to leave their names either with the Engineering Office or the S.A.C. Office.

It is necessary that persons come in uniform wearing any ribbons or decorations. Permission is being given by the various commanders-in-chief to authorize the wearing of uniforms on this occasion.

Preference will be given, first to those who served under him in his campaign in North Africa or Italy; secondly to those who served in the armed forces overseas and thirdly to those who served in Canada.

Study Made Easy Outlined in Sheets

The University Advisory Bureau for Ex-Service Students has had many requests from students for assistance in improving studying efficiency. In response to this demand, the Bureau has published a pamphlet entitled "Study Habits".

The pamphlet is meant to be applicable to University students generally. It does not attempt to deal with problems that may arise in specific courses, but provides general information that may assist students to organize a studying program for any course.

Students at Ajax who wish to discuss their study habits may obtain a pamphlet from Mr. Shepherd in the Faculty Office at Ajax, and may, at the same time, discuss the pamphlet's application to a study program for courses in Engineering. Pamphlets are available also in the office of the University Advisory Bureau for Ex-Service Students, Hart House Ajax, on Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons.

Delaney's Dilemma Entertains Students

(by PAUL CONOVER)

The presentation of the Dean Young Pennant, the Hot Jaxs Band, and Ray Delaney's Stage Revue, were featured at the third Athletic Night held in the Recreation Hall last night. A capacity audience was present.

Mike McAuliffe announced that Mr. Gilleys has donated a trophy which will be given to the best all-round athlete at Ajax each year. Sports ability, clean play and outstanding academic achievement will count towards it. A miniature will be provided for the winner to keep.

Presents Pennant

Mr. Gilleys presented the Dean Young Pennant, which went to 730. Cheers came from 730 as Mr. Gilleys enumerated their record of "five group championships," etc. Harry Yoneyama, the man whom as Mr. Gilleys said, "put it over," received the pennant on behalf of his house. "I wish to thank everyone of 730 for their co-operation," he said.

During the first twenty minutes the improved Hot Jaxs played both old and new swing favorites, such as "Southern Fried" and "Take the A Train," and were given extended applause. The band was enlarged by the addition of a guitar player.

Delaney's Revue, which was brought from Toronto by the Engineering Society was received mildly by the audience. All the dance routines except the grass skirt finale were tap dances. The songs were of all types. Swing, five, hillbilly, classical, popular, hymns and Hawaiian were performed. Mr. Delaney explained that some of their best talent were unable to come and that some of the skits were originated during the bus trip. Best liked by the audience were the duets of "Lady, you don't have to sing," sung by Marg Menamen and Tommy Young.

The skits were varied but most of the humour came from the audience. Featured, was a well acted playlet patterned after Baby Snooks. It has been picked to go to the Royal Alexander for a "Best of Canadian Service Shows," presentation. In the finale Bill Delo and his guitar class played Hawaiian themes.

Ray Delaney told The Varsity, "The audience was a little wild, but they showed us our mistakes and encouraged our good points. A little back talk from the audience makes it more of a party."

"The newly organized stage crew took complete charge tonight," said Mr. Brock, "and they will handle everything from now on." Bob Turner is the stage manager, with Jake Breithaupt his assistant. Dave Ham (electrician), Dave Philpott (scenic artist), and Doug Ayer (property man), are staff.

Buff Horton disclosed that the next Athletic Night would come from local talent.

After the show the artists were entertained in Hart House library by members of the students where coffee, tarts and sandwiches were served.

C.C.F. Provincial Leader To Speak

Mr. E. B. Jolliffe, Leader of the C.C.F. Party of Ontario, will be the speaker in Hart House Music Room at 8:00 p.m. on Thursday, May 9th. His topic will be "Reconstruction and Expansion in Canada."

Mr. Jolliffe is a graduate of the University of Toronto in Political Science and Economics. He also studied at Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar.

In making the announcement of the address, Roy Clark, a member of the executive of the U. of T. C.C.F. Club, said, "We are very concerned about the breakdown of relationships at the Inter-Provincial Conference which leaves labour legislation in an anomalous position and the division of taxation undecided. This situation is of the utmost concern to anyone who may possibly be looking for a job in the near future. We hope that many people will come to this meeting."

"The Ajax campus is an integral part of the University and we feel that the undergraduate activities should also be integrated," commented Ivan Owen, President of the U. of T. C.C.F. Club in stating that a branch of the club will be formed at Ajax sometime soon.

Fish? Fish? Fish? Fish? FISH? Fish!

(Large Pool Isn't It)

By OWEN J. LEMYRE

Do you like fish. I don't mean the kind you eat but rather the kind you look at? There is a very interesting exhibit of exotic piscus in the Royal Ontario Museum. For the past two weeks the museum has featured an exhibit of the private collections of the Toronto Aquarium Society. Pisciculturist would enjoy very much the display of the rarer fish.

A few of the various species of tropical fish in the collections will be discussed in the following paragraphs. We shall first learn about the Pterophyllum Scalare (pronounced terro fillums calay reel) more commonly known as the Angel Fish. It is a flat triangular fish usually pearly in colour with black stripes. The pterophyllum emeke, the most common variety are happy family members but they will eat very small fish. When the young are hatched they adhere to uncerseae growth and wiggle their tails to keep the water around them fresh. This goes on for about two days and during this time they are moved about by the female from leaf to leaf. Their natural environment is along the coast from British Guiana to the estuary of the Amazon. In captivity they will eat Daphnia finely sifted or mosquito larvae and the water should be slightly acidic (3 N soln. or is it 50%).

The next study is a type used in gambling as the cock is used. It is the Betta Splendens more often called the Siamese Fighting Fish and looks like any other common kind except it has many brilliant colours and a large tail. To have the fish fight they are put in the container and after a few minutes action starts.

They show very bright colour and when one refuses battle, the other automatically wins. The Helostoma Timminiski (what do you want to know how it is pronounced for) is a very interesting specimen to study because its common name is Kissing Gourami. It is native of the waters around the Malay Peninsula, Java, and Borneo. Like the Prochodus Insignis kissing to this fish has no sexual significances; it has to other types like the Cichlids of which the Angel Fish is one. To the Kissing Gourami the act is impersonal and has about as much emotion behind it as kissing the girls who come to your house dances good-bye when they leave. (Or maybe you are lucky and meet an emotional type of girl).

The Value of a Hobby

Among the trends in our modern life is the increasing tendency to turn to hobbies as an outlet for energy. Such a trend is evidenced by the increasing number of basements equipped with benches, jig-saws, lathes and other tools as well as the increasing number of clubs springing up throughout the country.

The "hobby idea" which infected so many servicemen during the war is now taking a firmer root throughout the country. It was during the latter part of the war that the services officially recognized this trend and its value and began to provide for "hobby shops" wherein men and women might spend their spare time busily engaged in projects ranging all the way from making model hearts and novelty jewellery to model aeroplanes, magazine racks and lamp stands.

Occupational therapy has long recognized the value of hobbies in mental readjustment and in the re-training of muscles after illness or accidents.

Photography has always enjoyed recognition as a hobby, for camera clubs have long flourished but it received an added impetus, for many in the services who were formerly "button pressers" learned to process their snapshots and derived added pleasure and pride in doing themselves what commercial firms had done for them before.

Today technical progress has given us the gift of time, but it has created a greater need for hobbies today than there has been before.

Firstly because mass production has enabled man to produce enough for his needs in less time than he formerly required, and thus he has been given more leisure time in which to enjoy himself. Secondly, it has changed the task of the worker into one of mere mechanical routine, and one which is dulling to the mind. Today the worker is in danger of becoming a mere automaton and devoid of all initiative.

Hobbies are one solution for these two unhealthy conditions. They fill out idle hours which become tedious and boring with interesting occupation and they provide the opportunity for initiative, for self-expression and for an escape from monotonous routine which exists in modern industry.

The worker has something to look forward to at the end of his day and the monotony of the grind is forgotten in his change of occupation. These reasons are contributing factors to the popularity of hobbies today.

It is to be expected that no two people will derive the same benefit from the same hobby as interests are so many and varied; each hobby provides something just a bit different which suits the individual taste.

Outdoor sports as skiing provide exercise in open air and sunshine while indoor sports as bowling are available in bad weather and during the long winter evenings. Sports in general develop the physical side of one's being but in addition they develop team play and initiative. They develop skills and psychologists maintain that the development of skills is a great help in overcoming one's feelings of inferiority. Lack of social skills often gives one such a feeling. Dancing which plays such a big part in social life today has its value both in helping to overcome such a feeling of inferiority and any awkwardness among a social group through the development of gracefulness.

Working in leather, wood and metal develops manual skills, judgment and knowledge of materials. In the collection of stamps and coins, a knowledge and fund of information is acquired. History and geography are put into practical use and interest in the various countries is developed leading to a broader point of view. This is desirable for in the world of today we are living no longer in our own small sphere but in the age of the atomic bomb and where the happenings in one small corner of the world may have their effect upon the happenings in another.

Happiness is the main goal of our ambitions. Wealth is only a means to happiness, which is living a life, in harmony with one's self and fellow man and in getting the most out of life. This is not necessarily leading the most exciting life but in finding a means of self-expression, and an escape from monotony and humdrum.

It is in this respect that hobbies have a great value. The hobbyist chooses his hobby for the one in which he can best express his innermost creative longings; it is a medium in which he can translate into concrete form his own original ideas and in doing so he finds pleasure.

He is not alone and he finds other interested in his medium of expression and with whom he has something in common. Thus there is also a social value in hobbies.

These all lead to a richer, and fuller life, a key to the door of happiness.

SLOBBER SLOBBER

There is an ominous thunder as the huge horse vans screech to a stop near the cafeteria. The portals of the cages break open, amidst the shattering of its hinges. Like a swarm of locusts, they sweep all before them. Many die under the trampling hooves of their comrades. But they died knowing they had their boots on.

With calculus books in one hand and sliderule in the other they storm the cafeteria. To our uninitiated observer it looks like savages storming a settlement, with brandishing spear and protecting shield. The mad stampede continues as the cafeteria, which had as many people as The Varsity has news items, is quickly filled. This is indicated by the victims popping out through the windows.

Having been swept in by the on-rushing tide our casual observer finds himself ensnared in a long winding line which is rumoured to lead to the food counters. (Latest reports say this is true).

The nearness of the howling, drooling mob frightens him. The growling, the burping, the scrapping over-lots of food carry him back to the middle ages. Lost in thought, he leans nonchalantly against the person behind him. In return he is nonchalantly thrown out of the line.

Broken in spirit, he decides to leave the cafeteria, but seeing another tidal wave bearing towards the cafeteria he shamefully crawls to the back of the line. There someone seeing his big brown eyes, his ruffled hair, the saliva drooling from his jaw, was moved. After deep consideration, he surreptitiously tosses him some crumbs. Words fall him. All he can say is "Woof".

The crumbs taste good. With a new life he looks ahead hoping to see the food counter. After what seems hours, he finds himself in the Promised Land. Frenziedly he grabs his eating utensils. Trembling he takes his tray. Leaning on the food counter he sees a wonderful sight. He sees food! Myriads of variety of food. He scans the array greedily.

Hard-boiled eggs, soft-boiled eggs, dried-eggs, fried eggs, poached eggs, raw eggs. FOOD! FOOD! Greedily he slides his tray. He works his way cautiously to the table. Ah, made it.

At last, contentment. There is a beautiful music in the japping up of soup intermingled with the tender undertones of unrestrained burps. Soon only the soothing munch-munch of crispy egg-white trickled through the air. Then all was quiet. He looks around him. The angry tribe has disappeared. Here and there a lone gourmand (Student) remains, exposed only by the fiendish gleam in his eyes.

His meal almost over, he feels in a pensive mood. A great problem thrusts itself on his mind. He deliberates over it for almost half an hour. Then finally he decides. Yes, no matter what his coffee looks like he will drink it. He WILL drink it. Fearfully he gulps it down. Suddenly, he shuddered as he recalled Macswell's coffee formula: "The bitterness of the coffee varies directly as the root of the chick-o-ry." Alas it was too late now. He had drunk it. Does he live? Or does he die? Does he live to fight another day? Who cares?

There is a terrible thunder as the horse vans screech to a stop. The doors fly open. And out gallops (guess who?) our casual observer. With machine gun in one hand and a calculus book in the other he races to the cafeteria. This is his greatest moment. Here they come straight to the cafeteria, half hidden by a cloud of dust. A fiendish cackle, a low puff of the machine gun and it is all over.

Then with a note of triumph in his eyes, a new vigour to his walk he marched majestically into the cafeteria.

AND THERE HE DINED IN PEACE.

Speaking OF SPORT

(By ED. SOKOLOWSKI)

Since Ishbaums, writer of the Engineers Bible has sued our former Sports Editor who has not as yet been replaced or the local news. As my sports has been limited only to African Golf (and not so good lately) do not expect too much from this column about sport.

Champs

Those who attended the Athletic Nite show last night will already know that the winner of the Dean Young Pen-Athletic representative, Harry Yomeyama, lead his crew to victory in five groups and three semi-finals. They won the Group A Basketball series. The nearest residence to the champs was 724 with 60 points. They also were runners up in three groups and were in two semi-finals. Residence 725 were Group winners in two and one semi-final. 725 were the Group B Basketball champions. The commuters deserve a lot of credit for reaching the Group A finals in Basketball as they had to come in from Toronto to play their games and they have had very little time to practice.

Canada's National Sport

There have been quite a few fellows interested in lacrosse at Ajax and it is expected that Ajax will have a representative team. If enough students for four teams show interest in this game a league in Ajax will be organized. The Athletic office have ordered 18 sticks and 18 pair of gloves.

Horseshoes

As a game for men who do not wish to use much energy (which should suit Engineers) four horseshoe pits will be built East of the Recreation Hall and it is hoped that there will be a horseshoe pit behind each residence. These will be started as soon as the work on the tennis courts has been completed.

Tennis

Speaking of tennis the four courts are being kept in constant use. The rainfall last Saturday should be a great help to the resurfacing. Work is going on all the time on the two extra courts, one on each side of the present courts.

Football

The football field is also getting into shape. A running track will be installed North of the hockey cushions after the horseshoe pits have been completed.

Golf

The rich man's game (I don't know how Ajaxer's do it) of golf will be played at the Oshawa Golf and Country Club in monthly tournaments. The Oshawa members have offered their hospitality to the skulemen at Ajax. All those interested in taking advantage of the reduced price at the St. Andrew's Golf course in Toronto are asked to obtain guest cards from the Athletic office. These will be valid from June 1st to Sept. 23rd.

Inter-Residence Sport

The inter-residence sports for the second term will start today with three baseball games to be played this evening. The residence have turned in the lists of most of their teams and there are now 24 teams in softball; 17 teams in tennis; 12 golf teams; 9 teams in borden ball; 11 horseshoe teams and each residence has entered a team in track and field. Schedules are now being drawn for all the sports. Monday nights will be reserved for entertainment such as inviting outside teams to play on the campus diamonds. The Athletic office is working overtime to bring out girl softball teams.

Ajax Softball Team

The Ajax Softball Team practised last evening and they seem to be getting along fine. This team will play against various clubs and also exhibition games with the Queen's Park group.

On Re-Reading Edgar Allan Poe

By HENRY KREISEL

There are times when the reading of a Poe poem or a Poe story gives me a great deal of pleasure, and there are times when I can't get beyond the first page of one of his stories or beyond the first ten lines of one of his poems. The enjoyment of Poe's work depends to an unusually large degree on the momentary mood of the reader, because in his creative work Poe plays almost exclusively upon the emotions of his reader, and not upon his intellect or his reason. It would therefore be futile to attempt to read a Poe poem intellectually; it must be read for sound and suggestion. Only then can Poe's intensity of feeling and the magic of his expression be fully appreciated. Poe achieves much of his poetic effect by approximating his language to music, and it is therefore an advantage to read his poetry aloud.

Poetry was for Poe not the right medium to convey profound ideas or ethical abstractions. To him the only true poem was the lyric, not over a hundred lines long, so that it might be read at one sitting. Technique he held to be of supreme importance, because only by making use of every possible device of prosody could he achieve the musical effect he desired. In order to produce "a suggestive" indefiniteness of meaning and "novel moods of beauty in form, in color, in sound, and in sentiment."

No one could deny that he succeeded brilliantly in carrying out his intention. But his success carries with it also his failure. Mere sound, mere magic of language is not enough to produce a poem of really supreme excellence. One cannot read Poe for an hour or two without feeling satiated and rather tired. He satisfies the ear, but after a while the mind rebels, because Poe hardly feeds it at all.

This was brought home to me again after reading selections from his writings in the Viking Portable Edgar Allan Poe, edited by Phillip Van Doren Stern (published in Canada by the Macmillan Company, $2.75). The volume is excellently edited and remarkably comprehensive. It includes all the familiar tales and poems, a representative selection from his letters and his most important critical essays. The latter two sections are really the ones that make this edition valuable. The tales and the poems have been reprinted innumerable times; Mr. Stern has done much for Poe by making his criticism easily accessible to the average reader.

Oddly enough it is Poe's criticism, and not the poems or the tales, which I find most satisfying on re-reading his work. That does not mean that I find myself in agreement with his critical pronouncements; I am very often at odds with him—he is often wrong in his judgments, and he is too didactic, but he is always stimulating, and at times very challenging. Poe's main objection to works of art is length. "The ordinary novel is objectionable, from its length," he writes, "for reasons analogous to those which render length objectionable in the poem. As the novel cannot be read at one sitting, it cannot avail itself of the immense benefit of totality." This argument can of course easily be refuted, and one cannot even be sure of how far Poe himself believed in it. One must always remember that he wrote very frequently with tongue well in cheek. He was always pressed for time and never really worked a critical theory out completely. And while I could not easily subscribe to James Russell Lowell's opinion that "Poe is at once the most discriminating, philosophical, and fearless critic upon imaginative works who has written in America," I do believe that his critical essays do not generally receive the attention which they deserve.

Phantasmagoria

ADVENTURE at Loew's

Clark Gable is back from the wars, large as life and twice as natural. In "Adventure", he plays the part of Harry, a swashbuckling, rough and ready bosun of the merchant marine, the love term and leave 'em big strong "he-man type".

Opposite him in role of Elsie, the grim, bespectacled, beautiful librarian is Greer Garson.

Among the supporting cast are Thomas Mitchell who plays the role of Mugit, Harry's devoted friend who is concerned for his soul; and Joan Blondell, who takes the part of the effervescent and loyal Helen.

The action of the picture takes place during the early part of the war against Japan, when enemy U-boats were able to sink American supply ships. The scene darts hither and yon about San Francisco, a Latin American port, back to Frisco, and over to Reno.

The plot is gay and scintillating though a bit improbable at times as when Harry and his side-kick wander into a library (of all places) and despite the "Quiet, no talking signs" our hero seems to be able to make an impression upon Elsie. Along comes Helen on the dot of closing time and the faithful Mugit conveniently walks out leaving the three to fight the battle of wits over some brandy and supper. During the evening Elsie takes his advice to heart and "takes off the lid". A free-for-all nearly ensues and he narrowly escapes.

They take a trip out to the country to Elsie's old farm and there amid the romantic surroundings things happen, for Elsie succumbs to Harry's big kiss under the tree and they end up in Reno (of all places) and are married.

Complications arise however, as soon as they return to earth and the boat sails with husband Harry on board.

The play winds up with Elsie having a baby and pappa arrives home just in time for the excitement and to talk it back to life after the doctors had failed. Everything is fixed up and the happy family are united.

The picture is good entertainment for the hot weather and should appeal to all Gable fans among the women.

The stars give a good account of themselves as far as acting goes even though the story seems unconvincing.

Beside the feature, the bill also includes a short newsreel and a "Tom and Jerry" cartoon.

"I KNOW WHERE I'M GOING"—The Uptown.

British pictures are well represented this week in Toronto with "I Know Where I'm Going" at the Uptown and "A Yank in London" at the Victoria and the Eglinton.

"I Know Where I'm Going" is a better than average picture. The acting is good for the main part; the setting is picturesque; and the photography is excellent.

Wendy Hiller and Roger Livesey in the starring roles fitted their parts to perfection. The supporting players were well chosen but the "Colonel" was given a difficult Blimp-like character which was exaggerated into the "Typical English Officer." At any moment he could be expected to begin a sentence "When I was in Pootna—".

Miss Hiller portrayed an ambitious bank manager's daughter who decided to get ahead in the world by marrying a rich man. She set

More About National Game

Lacrosse which is sometimes called Canada's National Game was played as far back in Canada as the days of Pontiac who after the fall of Quebec, used it in his stratagem to win the country back for the king of France.

The lacrosse sticks used in that time were however much more crude in design than those used today.

In recent years it has been revived and is quite popular among the cities and small towns of southern Ontario, such as Hamilton, Brampton and St. Catharines.

Know Your University

Work is being carried on in preparation for next autumn. Buildings on line 2 are already in the process of reconversion from their war time to academic appearance.

More classrooms and laboratories are being prepared, among them a laboratory for testing materials.

By next September there will be a student population of around three thousand and while work goes on in the academic area, increased living accommodation is being arranged in the residential area.

Hart House Backs Contest

As yet there have been no entries in the Snapshot Contest which is being sponsored by Hart House.

"However if the weather continues to be fine a number of entries should be forthcoming within the next few days" was the opinion of Gord Broomhall, member of the committee.

Ten dollars are being given away in prize money; the prizes will consist of a first prize of $5.00; 2 prizes of $2.00 each; and three prizes of $1.00 each.

Snapshots should not be larger than 3 inches by 4 inches and preference will be given to those taken about the campus at Ajax.

Any number of entries may be submitted by each contestant. There is no entry fee and the object of the contest is to stimulate interest in photography about the Ajax campus.

The contest closes around May 24.

out for Kiloran, a small island in the Western Isles, but was detained in Tobermory by a gale. Roger Livesey, as the Laird of Kiloran, is also waiting. He introduces her to the aristocracy of the district, most of whom are, like himself, almost penniless.

Hiller bribes a local youth to take her to Kiloran through the gale and Livesey accompanied them, fortunately for our heroine and the story. The motor quits and the boat is swept toward a whirlpool. After considerable battering the motor is repaired and the boat returns to Tobermory.

Joan, the banker's daughter, begins to doubt the good sense of her original plan but attempts to carry it out regardless of her new love for MacNeil, the Laird of Kiloran. He tells her the stories of his clan including the curse on all the future lairds since one of his ancestors massacred all the inhabitants of a nearby castle after his wife ran away with another man.

The gale drops and Joan sets out for the island. MacNeil sees her off and then, in defiance of the curse, enters Moy Castle. The curse works but with a catch and the picture ends happily, as most movie love stories do.

On the same program with "I Know Where I'm Going" are two good shorts and the news. The "Andy Panda" cartoon is laugh-provoking and the "Interesting Occupations" lived up to its name, holding the interest of the audience. All in all, it is a worthwhile show.

Newman Club Now Organized

At the last meeting of the Newman Club of Ajax Campus, it was decided to hold a religious discussion group. This group would discuss certain phases of religion; this work taking up about one-third of the meeting. Fr. Kyte was prepared to help on all doubtful questions but preferred to wait until the debaters had battled a point to a standstill before he entered. A most interesting and enlightening discussion was held at the last meeting.

There were two speakers who spoke on different subjects and the rest of the group fired questions that the average non-alcoholic might ask. In this way many new facts came to light about what non-alcoholics interpret the Catholic Church to be.

An other part of the future meetings will be a debating team who will discuss pro and con various current government topics and policy. Any other matters that would be of interest to the majority of the club might also be debated. It is hoped that such a team would be in action for the next meeting, which is scheduled for the first Tuesday in June.

If a sufficient number of the members are interested, Fr. Kyte hoped that he could have a choir for Sunday morning. There may also be some hikes organized as a number of members indicated their interest in that sport. If possible, there may even be enough to have a public speaking group. This is only the ground work for what is hoped will be a successful club next year.

Bedtime Tales For Dozy Dopes

As a continuation of last week's thrilling story we shall tell you of the latest developments of Bugs and Hank as they prepare for the race to see whose jalopy is the fastest. Will it be the 1946 crock or the 1950 super-deluxe jib.

The arrangements were made and Mort also decided to collect the gate receipts from the crowd, and to pay all hospital bills. Fair Felinda Catalina Champus promised to be there to give a whisker rub to the winner. In addition the winner would have his picture on the front page of the Haystack News.

The fateful Saturday dawned fair and bright, except for a little rain and a heavy fog. The roads were covered with a thick glutinous mud. Turtle-necked Hank put on an extra sweater, and added a few drops of benzol alchomethyllethylaluminol to his tank. Bugs had spent a happy night dreaming of beautiful Felinda Catalina and had also tanked up.

The crowd had gathered and the gate receipts were weighing heavily in Snerdimer's pocket. Bugs swooshed up in his super deluxe streamlined 1950 jalopy with its super deluxe streamlined 1950 plastic bumper and took his place at the starting line. Then amid clouds of steam and mud, Hank spluttered up in his old 1946 crock, making as much noise as seven boiler factories. Since the road was too narrow for an even start, he pulled ahead of Bugs and he parked his car about 100 yards in front. Suddenly Mort felt something in his ribs and a gruff voice snarled, "We've got you covered, bub, stick 'em up!"

Mort's heart failed him and he fainted. The gun went off but his explosion was drowned in the noise from Snerdimer's car. The 1950 jalopy started off; the 1946 crock started off; they both started off.

During the first second Bugs travelled 100 yards to where Hank started from while Hank only went 50 yards. When Bugs had gone another 50 Hank had only twenty-five yards lead. Then Bugs gained twenty-five while Hank had covered 12.5. Try as he would, and he would, Bugs could not overtake Hank. On and on the battle raged, Bugs did 12.5 to Hank's 6.25. By a mathematical progression he continued to gain as they raced on and on toward infinity. They disappeared in a cloud of mud off into the rain.

Will Bugs catch Hank? Will Snerdimer Mort recover? Will Felinda Catalina Champus pay off? We hope not.

Oil Company Scholarships For Engineering Students

The Imperial Oil Company has established four research fellowships open to Canadian university students and eleven undergraduate scholarships open to children of Imperial Oil employees. The fellowships are in chemistry or chemical engineering, mechanical engineering, petroleum engineering and petroleum geology. Nominations will be made by Canadian universities.

Describing the project as one to promote scientific research in industrial fields and to provide higher educational opportunities for Canadian students, Henry H. Hewetson, president of Imperial Oil Ltd., today announced establishment of four annual research fellowships and eleven undergraduate scholarships. Each research fellowship is valued at $1,000 a year and may be held for three years; each undergraduate scholarship is valued at $500 a year and may be held for four years.

The research fellowships are open to any graduate of a Canadian university and are for post-graduate work leading to masters' or doctors' degrees. One fellowship will be awarded in each of the following subjects: chemistry or chemical engineering, mechanical engineering, petroleum engineering and petroleum geology. Nominations for the fellowships will be made by Canadian universities and awards will be decided by a fellowship selection committee consisting of three members appointed by the National Conference of Canadian Universities and two members appointed by Imperial Oil. Candidates may specify the university or universities where they wish to conduct their research studies and these institutions need not necessarily be in Canada. Decisions will rest with the selection committee. Nominations must be made before June 1st of each year.

Holders of fellowships will be under no obligation to the company and the company will receive no rights to any patents resulting from their work. Results of the research will be published according to usual academic practices.

While the research fellowships are open to any university nominee and are confined to the four sciences mentioned, the undergraduate scholarships are confined to children or wards of employees or deceased employees or annuitants of Imperial Oil and its Canadian subsidiaries, and the studies may be carried on in any course given by any established Canadian university. One scholarship will be offered in each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Two scholarships will be available for the area comprising Alberta, Yukon and Northwest Territories; two scholarships for the area of the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland and two for each of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Applications for the scholarships will be made through company offices before June 1st by applicants who meet university entrance requirements.

Trains To Stop At Ajax Station

The Canadian National Railways announces that main line trains will stop at Dilco (Ajax) station in the future.

A recent survey carried out by the railway disclosed that the majority of those desiring week-end train service want to leave Ajax about 5:30 p.m. Friday and return from Toronto about 11:00 p.m. Sunday. As the number requiring service is not sufficiently large as to warrant an Ajax special the regular trains will take care of this traffic.

Trains stop as follows:

	Standard Time	Daylight Time
Going:
Lv. Ajax (Dilco) 4.25 p.m.	5.25 p.m.
Ar. Danforth 5.05 p.m.	6.05 p.m.
Ar. Toronto Un. 5.15 p.m.	6.15 p.m.
Returning:
Lv. Toronto Un. 11.30 p.m.	12.30 p.m.
Ar. Danforth 11.45 p.m.	12.45 a.m.
Ar. Ajax (Dilco) 12.15 a.m.	1.15 a.m.

The above service will assure connection to and from points west and north of Toronto. It is regretted that the number requiring Monday morning service does not warrant operation of Special Train and there is no regular service which would accommodate.

Week-end fares are in effect to and from all points in Canada and may be purchased from Mr. R. E. Ramsden, Agent, Ajax, Ont. whose office is situated in small building just south of garage opposite Post Office and Bank.

Tickets should be purchased not later than Thursday prior to departure in order that arrangements may be made for additional coaches.

Lights! Curtains! Action!

By OWEN J. LEMYRE

Our stage has undergone a very recent renovation in the past few weeks and we now have one with sufficient floor space to produce any large play. When next we have the opportunity to hear the University Symphony Orchestra or the Glee Club of the Toronto campus it will not be necessary to have half the group in front of the proscenium.

The stage has been widened by nearly five feet which now makes it some thirty feet in width. Formerly there was a wall at the back of the stage which concealed a passage from one side to the other. This was removed in order to give greater depth to the platform which is now approximately twenty feet deep. A false ceiling was torn down so that back-drops could be handled with ample clearance.

There were three new sets of stage lights put in this additional room and so give lots of illumination. The footlights have all been checked and repaired where necessary and new light control panels have been installed. This all assures us of having enough light to see the gorgeous lovelies that are presented on our stage from time to time.

A new addition to the side of the Recreation Hall has provided space for the property used by various entertainment groups who visit us but mainly used by the dramatic club. It has been difficult to obtain new curtains for the stage but it is hoped that new ones will arrive soon. Many costly and "hard-to-get" tools have been purchased so that stage sets can be made by the stage hands of the Drama Club. New canvas and ropes have also been obtained. All work in connection with productions can now be done by stage hands. The former room used for a sound transmitting booth has been removed and the equipment is stored in the property room. Unfortunately there is no proper transmitting room at present and so the paraphernalia must be brought out every time the loud speaker system is to be used. New dressing rooms are being provided.

"The characters" in the Dramatic Society of the Ajax campus expressed extreme delight in the new changes made and feel that they will be able to present bigger and better plays to you because of these changes. The larger archway frames our English Professor admirably as he lectures to his enthusiastic audience. We hope the audience is much more enthusiastic when they see action on our "face lifted" stage.

Oshawa Dance At Adelaide House

Ajax students are invited to a dance at Adelaide House in Oshawa on Saturday evening, May 11th, from 8:30 p.m. to 12 midnight.

Tickets should be obtained in advance from the Supervisor's Office, Hart House. The admission is 25c. Adelaide House is located five blocks south from the Four Corners in Oshawa.

Comprising the luxurious building and grounds which were formerly the home of Colonel Phillips, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the University, Adelaide House is operated by the Y.W.C.A. of Oshawa.

Hydro Camera Clicks

During the past week the Toronto Hydro-Electric Commission has had its photographer around the place taking pictures of the various installations on the campus. They will be featuring these pictures in the next issue of their booklet. They will also consist of photographs to illustrate the excellent fluorescent lighting in our drawing rooms and residence study rooms. There are more photographers around here than you can shake a stick at.)

Engineers — Journalists

"Of the fourteen hundred students now at Ajax, it is probable that at least ten or fifteen will find jobs as newspaper men after they graduate. More writers are needed all the time to interpret Science to the public, and to act as liaison between the Engineer and the layman," said Gregory Clark, well known journalist, addressing a meeting of The Varsity staff, on Tuesday evening.

"In the past journalism has largely been the field of persons with a so-called classical education. In the modern world the engineer played such a large part that it is necessary to have men with a knowledge of engineering combined with an ability to express themselves simply and lucidly. To the majority of people engineers and scientists are strange silent creatures who talk in logarithms and sines."

Mr. Clark told of his early days in newspaper business when writing was deliberately flowery and commented on the different style in common use today where the accent is on short terse statement. "A great deal is said in a very hurried for it to be necessary to few words. Life is too rapid and sift through drawn out paragraphs in order to find a few grains of interest."

"The war brought out into the open the gigantic part that Science plays today. The atomic bomb put the finishing touches to the job of making the public realize that money is needed for research. But now that the war is over funds will be harder to come by. Large concerns realize the need for educating the public as developments continue."

"When I was at the University," Mr. Clark continued, "we were amazed that Skulemen could even speak English, aside from writing. But now the ability to write well will stand them in good stead."

"Things have reached a sorry state when it takes a war to loosen the nation's purse-strings. In a democratic country the government cannot go against public opinion. In wartime the country is frightened into supporting research. In peacetime it must be educated into supporting research. The public must be made to realize the benefits which would ensue from a strong programme to this end. It will take men with a power of English and a knowledge of science to get it across to the nation."

Full Use Of Resources Possible, Says Jolliffe

"We could, if we undertook it in a planned way, make full use of our country. But it is too big a job for one corporation or group of corporations to handle." This was the theme of the address of Mr. E. B. Jolliffe before a group of fifty students in the Hart House Music Room last night. The meeting was sponsored by the University of Toronto CCF Club as a step in forming an Ajax Branch of the Club.

"Both right wing economists and left wing economists," said Mr. Jolliffe, "are agreed that Canada can enjoy full employment only by a large annual expenditure for capital purposes amounting to one and a half billion dollars or more. However, the Right Wing and both the old line political parties propose to leave this job to private enterprise. The left wing contends that private enterprise failed to do the job between 1919 and 1939, and will fall again."

"The CCF maintains that full production can be achieved only by national planning for reconstruction and expansion and that this will necessarily involve the nationalization of big industries. So far as continued capital expansion is concerned, and this is required on a very large scale in Canada, the CCF believes that no corporation or group of corporations is capable of undertaking it and that it can be done only by the planned investment of the nation's savings under the control of a national investment board working with the Bank of Canada."

"Unused capacity has troubled Canada for a long time," he stated. "The problem comes down to largely an economic problem. That was the trouble during the depression. We had the capacity, the resources, facilities, transportation system, and the human material to produce much more goods and services than we did. This problem must be faced up to by the younger generation. The older generation failed between the two wars. They could have solved it if they had had a remedy, but they didn't."

He cited the case of an Irish immigrant who was a first class machinist, and was "intelligent, aggressive, and responsible." He came to Canada in 1920 and was unable to get a steady employment until the war, when he was accepted as a skilled worker. "This man's skill went to waste for twenty years when it might have been applied to producing goods that would have been of value to the country."

"What is the way out? The New Deal, in the United States, tried spending money in bad times on public works. This didn't work, because public works are not enough. Money must be put into the productive activities of society, food, minerals, and raw materials. Our present Government will preserve the productive field for private enterprise."

"Dr. James, of McGill University, says that one and a half billion dollars must be spent each year in Canada for capital purposes. Canadians have been saving this much in banks, insurance policies, etc., but private enterprise could not invest that much. To use our capacities all our savings must be invested. There is a place for private enterprise, but there must be an objective towards which the Canadian people can work. The only possible agency to provide this plan is the federal government. Beyond the fact that it should give priority to low cost housing units I am not going to say what kind of a plan it should be. Canada is the only large country outside of the U.S.A. which is dependant on an unplanned economy."

After the hour long address, Mr. Jolliffe answered questions for another hour. Roy Clark a member of the Toronto Club's executive, acted as chairman.

Music Centre Place Of Beauty

If the Queen's Park Campus can boast of having the finest exteriors in its buildings, the Ajax campus may not be far amiss in boasting of having the finest interiors with modern fluorescent lighting and comfortable classrooms.

Hart House Ajax is no exception and one has merely to walk into the Music Room occupying the entire west corner of the north wing to convince himself of the truth of this.

Much time and money have been spent upon the Music Room and it is a thing of beauty, befitting as an inspiration to those students who will some day be designing and building the structures of the future.

Through two sets of double doors, which exclude much of the hustle and bustle in the hallways, one enters into the quiet, extensive room covered by well-polished brown linoleum floor.

Beige tinted square panels, about two feet to the side, do much to break up the monotony from the spacious walls, and also lend a warmth to the room.

In the centre are four square pillars, bracing up the ceiling of space and giving a sense of hominess to the room.

Except for the centre where the pillars enclose an acute space the ceiling is a light cream.

Ligating is both direct and indirect—incandescent tubes and a round an opal panel in the centre of the room, produce a soft, diffused light which is also reflected by the same ceiling, above, through a series of angled ceiling and wall fixtures which supplement illumination when required.

For those who wish to sit and relax, the place has been furnished with comfortable red and green leather lounges.

A beautiful Steinway piano is provided for those who wish to play classical music. The piano which is very valuable is kept locked but the key is available at the Hart House Office.

The home-like and refined atmosphere of the room make it an excellent spot for one to sit and relax and to enjoy good music. Already a number of talented students have availed themselves of the opportunity for practise and at almost any time melodious strains flood the adjacent hall.

The Orchestra and Glee Club meet regularly for practise there but the place is also open for club meetings and Chapel Services, whenever the Chapel is overcrowded. The formal opening will take place on May 23, when Sir Ernest MacMillan and Elie Spivak will be guests.

Special Music At Church Services

On Sunday, May 13th, Holy Communion will be celebrated at 8:30 a.m. in the University Chapel and there will be a General Service at 11:00 a.m. in Hart House Music Room.

The new chapel in Hart House will be used for the first time for the Communion Service.

The organ prelude at the General Service will be the "Pastorale" by Cesar Franck. "Hear Ye Israel" from Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be the solo and Karg-Elert's "Now Thank We All Our God" will be played as the organ postlude.

INSTALMENT 4

After having found out the many details of registration, Alis had some time on his hands (His father was a watchmaker), so he decided to explore the surrounding grounds, known affectionately to the old folks as the "Campus Torontosis".

If you have ever come tripping merrily out of the doorway of Simcoe Hall, you will know the glorious sight that greets your eyes. Well, Alis went tripping out alright, but unfortunate circumstances caused him to miss his race to the sidewalk. Thus he missed seeing the view of the Campus, but got his fill of scenery when two coeds went up the steps behind him.

At the time of his exit, the large circular patch of ground before him was occupied by some big, muscular men who were furiously engaged in kicking each other and a large ball in their midst. Alis could see at a glance that it was an even battle. It seemed that no matter how hard they tried, neither team was able to break the ball.

He walked down the street to a red brick structure that looked for all the world like the Engineering building. As a matter of fact, it WAS the Engineering building. He was about to enter when a large squad of men came out with funny looking instruments mounted on three long sticks.

Apparently the sticks weren't much good, because whenever they set the thing up, they had to turn a lot of screws and flip gadgets before they were satisfied. Then when they seemed to be satisfied, someone would kick one of the sticks, then the man in charge would say a few delicate words under his breath, then go through the whole procedure again.

Then one took a piece of brass from his pocket and let it hang on the string. Alis asked him why he did that. The man looked at him oddly and replied "To see which way is down". Alis thought to himself "Gee, he must be awfully dumb; everybody knows that down is at right angles to North".

Then suddenly one of them grabbed the end of a steel tape and went running madly off in the general direction of the Bank of Commerce building. Alis figured that he might have gotten away with it too only another one held the other end, and he was forced to stop roughly 99.976 feet away.

Alis could not make head nor tail of that business so he decided to go for another little stroll. He wandered off down the street till he came to a big building with a sign saying "Connaught Laboratories". This name arises from the fact that there is a man in a white coat standing inside the door telling people "You Connaught come in here".

Then he went across the street

Our Stand In Politics

The purpose of The Varsity is to serve all students on the Ajax campus regardless of their political viewpoint. It is therefore our belief that political matters do not take a prominent place in your editorial page; and that we refrain from expressing any editorial opinion on questions of a definitely political nature.

Nevertheless, in the matter of reporting student activities we feel that keeping the students informed is an important part of our duty.

Elsewhere in this issue is the account of a group at which the speaker is a man prominent in the political field, the leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the Ontario Legislature. We are trying to report it accurately and shall endeavour to report in the same manner and with the same prominence any other political speaker who may be invited to Ajax to present the case for his party.

Collective Tidiness

Tidiness is a personal asset, one of the very minor virtues. However it is one well worth cultivating. There are often times when tidiness can associate itself with thoughtfulness, particularly in public places.

In the cafeteria and in the Tuck Shop, for example there are people responsible for keeping the place clean. However these tasks are incidental to their main duties and come after their day's work. There are persons whose attitude is to "leave it to them to clean up" and leave trays, wrappings and refuse lying around to clutter up the place. On the other hand there are persons who possess the quality of tidiness and thoughtfulness for others and realizing that there will be others coming after them, will take the trouble to remove the remains of their meal or their snack, leaving their place in a tidy condition. This requires a small effort but the appearance of cleanliness and tidiness which remains is well worth the trouble.

This small effort, multiplied by the large number of persons of similar nature would go a long way to make the place look more attractive and to lessen the amount of work for other people.

THE PROMENADE

The Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra began its 13th season of Promenade Concerts Tuesday night with an excellent programme performed before an estimated 6,400 persons. Varsity Arena was filled to capacity, all available seating space being employed.

The programme consisted of:

- I. Choral Prelude (Sleepers 'Wake) as transcribed for orchestra by Eugene Ormandy and composed by J. S. Bach.
- II. First Symphony: Beethoven.
- III. (a) Aria with Orchestra: Prologue, from "I Pagliacca," Leoncavallo. (b) Songs with Pianoforte: Silent Worship, Handel; La Danse, Rossini; Think On Me, Scott; Chanson de Varlaam, from Boris Godounoff, Moussorgsky. IGOR GORIN with Leo Barkin at the Piano.
- IV. Corral Nocturne and Hoedown from "Rodeo," Aaron Copland.
- V. To the Little Star—IGOR GORIN with Orchestra, Moussorgsky.
- VI. Romeo and Juliet Overture, Tschaikowsky.
- VII. None Ever, IGOR GORIN with Orchestra, Mattei.
- VIII. Tales From Vienna Woods, Strauss.
- IX. Dance of the Comedians from "Bartered Bride," Smetana.
- X. None But the Lonely Heart, Tschaikowsky; IGOR CORIN with Piano; Figaro, from Barber of Seville, Rossini.
- IX. and X. were encores.

We noted that the orchestra responded very well to the baton of the guest conductor Fritz Mahler, of New York. The violins appeared to be very well trained, as did the entire string section, especially in the Romeo and Juliet Overture. A new placing of the double basses was utilized, i.e., two rows each of four double basses directly behind the violas instead of behind the cellos. The cello section was strong, comprising ten instruments. The french horns were quite good especially when carrying the beautiful theme of the Romeo and Juliet Overture.

We were surprised to hear a loud harp passage in the middle of the Romeo and Juliet Overture. Apparently it is an arrangement peculiar either to Mr. Mahler or the T.P.O. as this passage does not appear on recordings and we cannot remember having heard this particular harp run before.

into the Electrical Building, and looked into a direct current lab. What he saw was positively shocking! (It was negatively shocking, too, but he didn't notice that.)

On going into the Physics lab, he walked down the long hall till he came to a door marked "J. Satterly", into which a steady stream of attendants were carrying large pails full of Goldfish, and out of which they were carrying large blocks of ice. This was too much for Alis. He collapsed to the floor in a dead swoon.

What will happen to our hero? Will the doctor come swoon? Will the swallows go back to Kapuskasing? Will they put Kapus back in the kasing? Are these puns as bad as they sound? How do they sound? How does Owen Sound? If this column is continued any longer it will be a waste of space.

Melinda Advises

Dear Melinda :

I understand that you are giving advice on personal problems, so I thought that you could help me with mine.

I have been going out on week-ends with a boy from Ajax. During the week I go out with another two chaps from the city. However my boy friend from Ajax is coming in some night during the week when I am supposed to be going out with one of my city b.f.'s. What can I do? I am in a big mess.

Yours,
D. T.

Dear D. T.:

No doubt you are in a big mess and you should feel sorry for yourself for nobody else will. However, you have asked for advice and so I will help you out.

Call around to your city b.f.'s place around six o'clock with a dose of halitosis. Tell him you love him and want to kiss his ruby lips. One whiff of you and he'll run away and you will not have to worry about him.

As to your Ajax friend, use Blisterine for a gargle and your halitosis will vanish in bit. (meaning a little bit of tea). Then when he smells your breath fragrant as the soothing zephyrs he will say "Ah, my little D.T., my little pink elephant, how often do I see you in my dreams when I've been out all night at a quiet nook among the spruce trees partaking of the refreshing draft."

Then your romance will be complete. So don't forget each morning, noon and night use Blisterine—it smells. It reeks.

Melinda.

Speaking OF SPORT

(By ED. SOKOLOWSKI)

In the last issue of The Varsity we gave a very brief synopsis of the game which symbolizes Canada. Here is still a little more on this rough game. The game of lacrosse was invented by the North American Indians as everyone knows. This is one of the oldest athletic contests and one of the oldest games on the North American continent. Lacrosse was officially named Canada's National game in 1867.

It is now played in the United States, Great Britain and Australia after it had been introduced to these countries by visiting Canadian teams. Box lacrosse as it is now termed was played in an open field but to make its popularity grow and to introduce keener competition it is now played on hockey cushions. This makes the game more interesting as it is confined to a certain area and more fans are attracted to the game.

After the introduction of Box Lacrosse we can now talk of the lacrosse team at Ajax. The lacrosse equipment just arrived last night and the students were out to organize the Ajax Representative team. Approximately 14 men showed up to the practise to break in the new sticks. They had a little game between themselves to get to know each player and it looks like the team may turn out to be quite a well organized outfit. At the moment the team needs another goal tender which is an interesting position to play. Anyone interested in seeing a game of lacrosse should be out at the hockey cushions Monday evening to see "Ozark Olsen's" boys from residence 727 play against Gord. Schacter's crew from residence 722.

The baseball games got off to a flying start Tuesday with some teams promising some good games. A new baseball diamond has just been completed at the end of Churchill avenue. A gate will be fixed in the fence to make the diamond easily accessible to the students. This is one of the better diamonds on the campus.

Some of the games scheduled are not being played as one or both of the teams are not showing up. This makes it quite difficult for those who are asked to referee these games as they are like the rest of us and must also study. They offer to look after these games on their own time and if a game cannot be played their time is wasted which otherwise could be used for their studies. So if your name is on the list for certain sports, co-operate with the athletic office and turn out to these games.

Residence 737-A with Johnny McCreedy as Athletic Rep. defeated residence 732-D, K. Mohun as their Athletic Rep. In the final game in bowling, residence 737-A finished off with 2,392 points and residence 732-D came very close with 2,325 points. 737-A are now bowling champs on the Ajax campus. The bowling alleys at present are open to all at any time.

733B softball team swamped 729B last night on the diamond north of the 'Rec Hall under very difficult conditions. The ball seemed to be very hard to handle as it bounced from stone to stone under the urging of a stiff nor'wester.

Will (All-Star) Hall, 733B's hurler, was the star man as he threw circles around the opposing batters' clubs. There was little sliding after the first close play due to the condition of the field. The game was declared over after a hotly contested infield fly with two men on bases. 733B were left the undisputed victors on the good end of a 15-11 score, despite the fact that 729 played half an inning more than Res. 733.

Opener Tied 3-3

Last night 727 and 729 played to a 3-3 tie in their first borden ball game of the season. Play in the first half was very ragged, mainly because of a lack of knowledge of the rules. Both referees were kept busy explaining after every whistle. Half time score was tied 1-1.

729 seemed to carry the play most of the way in the second half up till about 5 minutes to go. They were leading 3-1 when Morris scored his second goal of the night to make it 3-2. With about 1 minute to go McReery scored for 727 to tie the score. In the overtime period the play was the best of the whole game with 727 showing a decided edge. In spite of this they were unable to score before the final whistle.

THREE LITTLE PIGS

By J. F. FYDELL

P. Neil Bacon had always been the problem child of Mrs. Lena Bacon. Ever since he had been born, he had caused her no end of trouble. First, he would never keep his tail curled, then he would squeal either too loudly or at the wrong frequency. His two brothers, Hammon Bacon and De Lishus Bacon, were altogether different. They were good Bacons and always kept their tails curled in the prettiest hyperbolic spirals you ever could wish to see.

P. Neil however allowed his tail to become more like an epileptoid which was not the proper shape for any self-respecting Bacon.

At school Neil had always been a problem. Hammon and De Lishus always came home with their lessons well learned.

At the age of seven, Hammon Bacon (called Ham for short) could recite perfectly the name of all the mayors of Hogtown so well that his teacher gave him the red ribbon which all good Bacons have. De Lishus too, was smart at school. He learned the names of all the hotels in Hogtown from the big Laylor Kroy to the famous Drof Hotel where all the chorus girls used to stay.

Neil would not learn the names of the mayors of Hogtown—or the names of the hotels; he liked to draw pictures in his books.

After going to high school the three entered University at Hogtown: Ham was a brilliant student

Bedtime Tales

He was also clever and took Arts. He learned how to write poems to his girl friend; he also learned the story of Hecetown, and exactly how many books there were in the big library.

Poor Neil was not clever. He tried medicine—but could not remember one bottle from another—one day he tried to tell them apart by tasting them and ended up by seeing pink cows and green elephants. He flunked. Next he tried Arts but could not learn how to write poems about his girl friend's curly tail. He could not remember how many books were in the big library. One day he tried to count them and fell asleep. He failed in his exams and so he had to give up Arts. Next he tried Engineering. Someone told him that it did not take many brains to be an engineer so he asked if he could be one and they sent him away out into the country to study—to a place where they used to make gunpowder—hoping to get rid of him.

Neil studied hard. Each week he was sent out to count the number of hoof lengths between the trees and the buildings. He learned about Cos A and Sin B—not knowing what they were, and how to draw all kinds of square ice cream cones upside down. He spent his mornings in a big room full of bottles and all kinds of smells. He had to tell where golf balls would land on the green and how fast cars would have to go before they could stop. He learned too about what made electric lights go on and off.

At last they told him he was an engineer and let him go.

Meanwhile his clever brother, who now called himself G. Hammon Bacon, had bought a fine big house in Hogtown where the big fat pigs lived. His other brother also had a fine big house and he was now mayor because he could squeal better than the other pigs.

Little Neil—who had never grown very big, had to build his own house. He planned what kind of house he wanted; remembered when he had drawn the square ice cream cones, and drew a house on paper. He designed it so that it would stand a pressure of R Cos alpha slugs mass on it and F sin beta pounds weight on it. Then he got married to a nice pink piggie and they lived in their little house. One day there was no meat.

People became hungry and often the wolf came to their doors asking for a steak. Finally the wolf became rude and broke into people's houses. Not finding any meat he ate the people themselves up.

He came to the home of G. Hammon Bacon—asked for some meat—didn't get it—so began to bellow and blow. He finally huffed and puffed open the door and seeing G. Hammon Bacon sitting there rolling in fat, put him into a frying pan and fried him with some eggs he bought in the grocery store. After a time he became hungry again and this time called on De Lishus Bacon. As De Lishus would not let him in, he began to huff and puff. At last the house could not stand all the huffing and puffing and the door blew in. He found De Lishus Bacon just washing the dishes so taking a clean frying pan he turned on the stove and fried De Lishus Bacon for supper.

Neil could not get any meat and was getting hungrier and hungrier. Then Mr. Wolf called at his place and began to huff and puff with all his might. However Neil had learned how to resolve forces into their X and Y components and resolved the huffs and the puffs into their X and Y components so that Sigma X and Sigma Y became zero and lost their effect.

When Mr. Wolf got a clue and realized what was happening he tried another plan. He dressed up as the Fooler Brush Man by putting on an old sheepskin jacket he once bought at a rummage sale. Neil saw him coming up the sidewalk and recognized him as being the wolf in sheep's clothing. So he put on the kettle, caused the electrons to travel through the element in his electric stove thereby raising the temperature, and transforming the water in its liquid phase to water in its vapour phase. Then pinning up a number of Pretty Girls with red, blue and green sweaters in the living room where the Wolf could see them he selected from his golf sticks the heaviest putter he could find.

The door-bell rang and he answered it, and pretending not to know him, he invited the Fooler Brush man in. When the Wolf came in and saw all the Pretty Girls lined up on the living room wall he let out a long Who-o-o-o like the ones Neil had heard in the cafeteria when he took his engineering course when girls came to visit the place.

Then Neil swung his putter with a velocity equal to V squared. It clipped Mr. Wolf's head and sent it spinning with a horizontal velocity equal to V squared cos alpha and a vertical velocity equal to V squared sin alpha. It travelled in a parabolic arc and landed in the garbage pail outside the door. Neil then took the rest of Mr. Wolf, cut him up into nice juicy T-bone steaks which he had misised for so long and invited all his engineer friends to dinner. While they ate he told them all about how he managed to get Mr. Wolf and being engineers they all understood quite well.

ART, MUSIC AND DRAMA

Once or twice the tiumpets and trombones appeared to be a little weak but on the whole they were not too bad. The xylophone was particularly good in Hoedown.

Igor Corin was good. He was superb. His voice alone is worthy of the highest commendation. But in addition to a beautiful, rich, powerful voice the man has a wonderful technique, and personality which made the audience very receptive to his renditions. He had made friends with the audience before he sang his first note by his disarming smile and very pleasant attitude. He seemed to be thoroughly enjoying himself, which was infectious. He was recalled many times by a very predominantly feminine audience, and his encore of the Factorum Largo from the Barber of Seville was the best presentation of this well-known operatic selection that we have ever been fortunate enough to hear. "To the Little Star" was another song in which he excelled. It was unfortunate that the orchestra tended to "drown him out" in parts of the Prologue.

To anyone contemplating attending next week's concert we would say this: 'Please get there early if not for your own sake to obtain good seats, than for the sake of those already there who do not wish to be disturbed by latecomers. Despite announcements in the newspapers some persons arrived 10 to 15 minutes after the concert began, although we were later told that an accident had held up Bloor Street car traffic. Remember the concert begins at 8:00 p.m. sharp. Next Tuesday evening Jean Dickenson, Soprano, will be the guest artiste. The programme NEXT WEEK:

- I. Overture by "Oberon," Weber.
- II. Classical Symphony, Prokofieff.
- III. (a) Theme and Variations (Aria with Orch.), Mozart-Adam. (b) Three songs with Pianoforte, JEAN DICKENSON with Leo Barkin at the piano.
- IV. Overture To An Imaginary Dream (first performance), Robert Russell Bennett.
- V. Rosenkavalier Waltzes, Richard Strauss.
- VI. Que La Voce, from "I Puritani," Bellini, Jean Dickenson with orchestra.
- VII. Suite for Strings, A. Corelli.
- IX. Finale from Fifth Symphony, Tschaikowsky.

South's bidding was strictly sacrifice as he would rather go down a few tricks and stop East, West from making the contract for the 700 rubber. West decided it would be more profitable to double the 4 spades than to go 5 hearts which was a sure contract.

West opened with the Jack of Hearts which south trumped. South then drew trump in two rounds, the second round taken by East's Ace. East now led a small heart hoping that South would trump not knowing where the Ace was sitting which he did. In order to fulfill his contract South needed an entry to the board so he led his King of Clubs. West made the fatal mistake in overtaking the king with his Ace. South now had an entry to the board and west could do no harm since south could only lose to the Ace of diamonds.

West should have realized that his only hope of setting the contract was to find South with two clubs and if he had kept his Ace until they were led again south's entry to the board would have knocked out, with the result that south would have missed his contract by one. In this case East and West made the error by not bidding their 5 heart contract.

Hart House Dance Promises To Be Success

Plans for a dance to be held at Toronto Hart House were made at a short meeting of the Hart House Ajax House Committee last night. It was decided to hold the dance on Friday, June 14th (four weeks from next Friday).

A sub-committee was appointed, and given instructions to arrange for the best Toronto band available on that date. Several orchestras were named, but no announcement is to be made until definite arrangements are made.

A budget was set for one band (to play in the main gym) but more bands for other dance floors are to be arranged for if interest warrants. It was pointed out that, as it will be summer, the quadrangle will be open, which adds greatly to a Hart House dance. Because the premises are free, and Hart House Ajax will not attempt to make a profit, the ticket price is expected to be very reasonable for an affair of such calibre.

"The classical halls of Hart House Toronto will be a pleasant change from our wartime constructed buildings," said Mr. Emond, Supervisor of Hart House, Ajax.

"With the full co-operation of the student body behind the committee," said Mr. D. A. McCammon, "there is no reason that this dance cannot surpass the wonderful affairs that have been held in Hart House in the past."

Honorary Degree To Be Conferred

President Sidney Smith announces that the Senate of the University of Toronto has offered the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on His Excellency Viscount Harold Alexander, Governor-General of Canada and that His Excellency has graciously accepted the Senate's offer. The Governor-General has intimated that he will visit the University of Toronto on Thursday, May 23rd. A luncheon will be given in his honour in Hart House at noon and there will be a special convocation at 3 p.m. when the President will present His Excellency to the Chancellor who will confer the degree by authority of the Senate.

McMASTER DEGREES

Gowns and mortar boards paraded across the campus of McMaster University yesterday at the graduation ceremonies which took place in Hamilton.

182 graduates, in Arts, receive their sheepskins marking the termination of college days for many. The Baccalaureate address was delivered to the students yesterday in the beautiful stone chapel.

Equipment Crash Cost Ajaxers Cash

"That'll be so much off your lab deposit," says the demonstrator with a slight leer as he glances at the wreckage of a meter blown by too much current, or a motor smashed by running too fast or a flask dropped on the floor.

Students find that no matter how careful they have been during the year, they seldom receive a complete refund on their lab deposits. They are charged for the slightest breakage in every lab, well every lab but one.

No indeed, the men in charge of the Mechanics of Materials Lab are not renowned for their kindness to students, but in this lab the object of the experiments is to study the conditions under which materials break. "Will the material under test stand the strains imposed upon it in industry", is the main question studied.

In the building trades and in manufacturing a study of the strength of materials used is of great importance. What indeed would happen if the parts of an engine broke frequently or a hotel collapsed after several years of use. This actually happens, in fact some machines are famous for the amount of time they spend in the repair shop.

On the other hand when a machine such as the Flying Fortress is built all its parts are made considerably stronger than normal flying would require. Testimony to the strength of their construction is the fact that many were able to struggle home although riddled by bullets.

In this lab the engineering students are given an idea of the methods used to test the strength of materials and also they learn the properties of building materials. Many interesting facts are learned. For example, after several years of use wood has only half the strength it had when cut. Perhaps this is the reason why the roofs of old buildings droop.

Most of the testing is done by compressing or stretching a material until it breaks, the distortion under different loads and the amount of force required to break it being observed. In these tests it is found that under tension and compression steel and even concrete flow like a liquid before they break.

How are such terrific stresses exerted? Many huge machines that have only the one function, to exert huge forces, are solidly mounted in the lab. On one of these machines a force of 200,000 pounds can be exerted. The other machines

Oshawa Y Dance Week-end Hit

For the first time last Saturday, Skulemen from Ajax went in large numbers to the Y.W.C.A. in Oshawa for one of the regular "Over Twenty" dances.

The dance, held in beautiful Adelaide House, started at 8:30 and finished somewhere around midnight in a mad scramble for the last bus back to Ajax.

Music was provided by an amplifier system and records.

"There were enough girls there so that if anyone missed a single dance, it was his own fault," commented Bruce Neilson.

Dancing took place on two floors and the couples wandered from one to the other.

The staff of the Y.W.C.A. said they were glad that the Engineers came and they hoped that the dances would be patronized in the future.

are smaller, but to specially prepared samples they can do tremendous damage. Under 60,000 pounds pressure an ordinary brick literally crumbles to dust and only 3500 pounds force are required to break a rope an inch thick.

On the basis of such tests, a set of standards has been drawn up by the American Society for Testing Materials. If a rope or beam, of iron or wood, does not satisfy these standards it is of inferior quality and care must be taken in its use. Even cement is listed in the ASTM Book of Standards, but with cement not only is strength considered but also the time of setting and the likelihood of its shrinking and cracking. The time of setting is of vital importance. If concrete were to harden too soon it would not pour into the forms, and if it were to take too long it could not be used in some jobs.

These standards and a study of the materials to be used enable the engineer to design a building, or a road, or a machine that will stand the strains and damage to which it is likely to be subjected.

Perhaps the best example of good planning is the Empire State Building in New York. When a bomber crashed into it last summer a huge hole was knocked out of its side and several floors were gutted by burning gasoline, and yet otherwise very little damage was done. This huge building would probably be able to stand an earthquake.

One former is worth a thousand reformers.

Behind every difficulty there is opportunity.

Dinner Highlights Engineers' Convention

The Engineering Society of Canada held a dinner on Friday evening in the Royal York Hotel.

Among the speakers were Dr. Hogg, of the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission; Dean C. R. Young, of the Faculty of Applied Science; Professor G. R. Lord, President of the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers, and Hon. C. D. Howe, Federal Minister of Transport.

In his speech Dr. Hogg said that the young student engineer was required to serve a term in the various departments, doing various jobs. This gave him a broader outlook and helped him in many cases to discover his real field.

Dean Young told of the changes that had taken place in training engineers, tracing the development from the early conceptions of engineering as an art where engineers in training were treated like apprentices or pupils up to the present day when engineering enjoys the status of a profession and student engineers are given a knowledge of the basic fundamentals.

Professor Lord outlined what the Society had done in Ontario; this included sponsoring an act in Legislature, making it compulsory for anyone setting himself up as an engineer to belong to the Association, setting up a job evaluation study which resulted in better salaries being paid to engineers, setting up scholarships for students and planning for new positions to be filled with ex-servicemen upon graduation.

Hon. C. D. Howe expressed optimism regarding the possibilities of the engineering profession. He stated that at present there was a great shortage of technically trained manpower; moreover there was in industry an expansion equal to that experienced during the war. "We are making more steel in Canada than ever during the war and are twelve months behind," he said. He spoke about the opportunities in Canadian Plutonium plants and said that it should be attractive to physicists. "At present there was trouble in staffing it." Referring to the rubber industry at Sarnia where there was a large synthetic rubber plant he stated it was difficult to find trained men for work in the laboratory of the plant.

Silver trays were presented to two members who had made contributions through research. They were Mr. Perc Dobson, Chief Engineer and director of research in the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission, and Mr. Maurin Ackroyd, Chief Plant Engineer with the Bell Telephone Company.

First Social Event In Hart House

On Friday, May 10th, the School of Architecture held a dance in Hart House Music Room. The dance started at 9:00 p.m. and finished shortly after one a.m.

The evening was arranged by a committee consisting of Don McCammon, Kay Currie, Bill Grierson, and Dave Philpott. Music was supplied by records played over the Music Room amplifier system. Midway during the evening a lunch was served, and was highly praised by all present.

This was the first social event held in Hart House by any of the organizations on the campus and led the way. The House committee are hoping that other groups will follow the example set, and will get together for a similar gathering.

Novelty numbers included a spot dance, won by Stan Kent and partner, who received a yo-yo, and an elimination dance in which Ray Turner won a set of drawing pencils.

Among those present were Professor Carswell, Assistant Professor of Architectural Drawing; Mr. H. L. Shepherd, Asst. to the Director of Studies; Mr. Stan Kent, Architectural instructor; Mr. Emond, Director of Hart House, and guests.

Forty-five couples were present and many of the guests commented on the excellence of the Music Room for affairs of the sort.

"If other groups can do as well as the Architects, they will have no cause for complaint," commented Ernie Fedryk.

"The entire evening was a great success, especially the food," was the opinion expressed by Don Hallford.

Col. Medland Advises Jaxers

Col. T. Medland, Director of Information and Publicity of the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers paid a visit to Ajax this afternoon and evening where he interviewed a number of the students. This is his second visit to Ajax and he spent a busy time answering questions asked by the students.

The Association is showing an interest in the students and already is trying to arrange for new positions to be available when the class will graduate in 1949.

Mr. R. L. Shepherd has been recording the list of names of those who wished to join the Association as student members.

CONGRATULATIONS

On Saturday, May the 11th, at the Western Hospital his wife, Joan, presented Al Judd of 7-H with 8-lb. 10-oz. Nancy. Wife and daughter doing fine but Al seems to be pretty worn out from the ordeal.

Coming Events

There will be a meeting of the Engineering Society tonight at 5:30 p.m. in the Faculty Board Room.

The Skule Dinner arrangements will be discussed. A complete turnout is required.

Don't forget the opening of the Hart House Music Room Wed., May 22, with Sir Ernest MacMillan and Elle Splanak.

The Hart House Chapel is completed and will be formally opened on Sunday.

The regular weekly rehearsal of the Glee Club will be held in the Music Room tonight at 5:15.

The Dramatic Club will hold a rehearsal for the cast of "Pack Up Your Troubles" tonight at 6:30 sharp. All are requested to be present.

Appointments Announced

Mr. W. "Bill" Irwin, S.A.C. representative, who is just out of the army where he served with the Governor-General's Horse Guards. He will be in charge of the S.A.C. office at Ajax which will now be open all day.

During the past weeks the Secretary, Mrs. Brynildson has capably carried on in a part-time capacity, but the work has been very heavy for one person and it was found advisable to increase the staff.

Dr. E. R. Humphrey, Dentist, who is a graduate of the University of Toronto Faculty of Dentistry of '38. He practised in Toronto till 1942. He joined the Canadian Dental Corps. He served a period of four years and during that time he was attached to units of the Navy, Army and Air Force.

Dr. Humphrey has set up his office in the west wing of the hospital and appointments may now be booked.

Mr. A. H. Blackmore has been appointed Assistant to the Director, U. of T., Ajax Div.

A graduate in Chemical Engineering, (Toronto '36), Mr. Blackmore was discharged from the Canadian Army at the end of March, of this year.

Previous to joining the army, he was with International Nickel Co. in the Copper Refining Division, Copper Cliff, Ont.

MONEY! MONEY! SHARE THE WEALTH!

D.V.A. cheques will be available to Ex-Service students in residence from housemasters on the evening of May 14th and to non-residents at the cashier's wicket in the Bursar's office, York Hall, from 12 noon to 2 p.m. of May 15th.

Students are reminded that the next installment of residence fees fall due early in June.

If cheques are not received from housemasters, they may be collected from the Bursar's office.

Wanted—Food

Those of us at Ajax who so recently returned from overseas and understand how "the other half of the world lives" should not have to be reminded that we in Canada today are indeed fortunate in being able to sit down to well-stocked tables and partake of an abundance of good nourishing food.

With no more effort on our part than to walk into the cafeteria, load our trays with good wholesome food and then sit down and eat it, we are inclined to take everything for granted in a child-like manner and to forget that there does exist a problem for those whose duty it is to feed us.

Nevertheless there does exist a problem and it does have to be faced in order that we may eat. The cafeteria authorities are faced with grim realities with which we have only a slight acquaintance by hearsay. First of all there are such things as ration regulations. We have read about them in the papers until we are so bored that we turn to something else. To those who meet them in their duties of providing us with food they are far from boring. They are a big headache. They have to limit their purchases to the quantity allowed by the coupons made available and they have to apportion that quantity among the thousand who eats here daily, as well as to allow so much for cooking purposes. Then there are shortages to be faced; meat, butter, apples, preserves, as well as many other foods are just not available in the quantities which are needed. It is therefore necessary to substitute quantities of the foods which are available.

Naturally this means less variety in our diet and more complaints from those who do not understand the situation, which adds to the unpleasantness of the situation.

In a personal letter received a short time ago from an English friend the following comment was made: "When you sit down to your juicy T-bone, please think of me and our sausages."

Thousands of miles away we forget the struggle for existence which goes on at the same time as we thoughtlessly leave our plate of turnips or cabbage to be consigned to the garbage.

Have we, ex-servicemen forgotten so soon the desperate straits of the people who were so hospitable to us, such a short time ago?

While the custom of "grace before meat" may be matter of form to many of us yet it should be a reminder to us in our homes that we Canadians are very fortunate when we sit down to eat.

Under circumstances such as these it comes to us as a great shock to learn of the large quantity of uneaten food in the cafeteria. Surely if one is not hungry it should not be necessary to take six slices of bread to be left on the cafeteria table to go to waste or to take a plateful of salad when one prefers only a slice of meat as has been the case.

In view of the fact that the engineering profession is looked up to and its members are respected as good citizens, it would be well for us to deserve that respect by co-operating in the nation-wide economy of food drive which is being carried on in order to provide food for the tables "across the pond."

J.F.F.

Engineers in Government

In an address to the Engineering Society of Canada, Hon. C. D. Howe stated that he hoped to see the day when the profession would be represented to a greater degree in the government. Engineers with their practical knowledge and training should make good administrative heads. Many engineers have succeeded to high executive posts in business and should prove equally capable in government as well.

In this atomic era there will be still greater need for technically trained men to guide the nation's destiny.

Poetry For The New Age

A student, an Eng. Physics type, sat contentedly smoking his pipe, and he dreamt of a girl with a spirally curl.

Of the plain Archimedian type. The peachy poem above is one of a collection, not to be published by Murgatroyd Anonymous, the famous author of "Brand New Braces, Snappy! Snappy! Who wants a Hole in the Head?"

Most of the poems are about Ajax, for Murgatroyd is one of our students here. Particularly touching is his beautiful "He should be Hung", or "The Lost Rope", which starts off—

One day as I sat in the class-room,
I was weary and ill at ease—
For our physics prof. was just starting off,

To recite us an ancient wheeze.
The second verse is even worse. There are other poems in the collection of course, and when I visited Murgatroyd and found him reading "Forever Amber" and Sears' "Mechanics" simultaneously, I understood the secret of his success.

"How did you do in the Easter exams?" I asked.
That was all he needed. He told me about the square on Avogadro's hypotenuse. He talked for half an hour. He explained Einstein's theory of relatives, and a lot of other stuff. He said that he believed that people wrote better poetry than anybody, including himself. Modest fellow.

"Tell us your life history," I invited. "How did you get started in this poetry racket?"

"Everything is an inspiration to me. Most poets have to have the birds and the flowers. I write about old shoes, and rectangular parallelepipeds, and frankfurters—"

"With or without?"

"Either with or without."

"Fiddle in the middle?"

"If you wish."

"You must be a genius."

"Oh, of course, I'm the original genius with the light brown hair."

"Tell us another one, do."

He recited his stirring poem of the sea. The sodium chloride tang of the ocean just permeates through "Song of a Fisherman's Sweetheart." It goes thusly:

My Johnny lies over the ocean,
My Johnny lies over the sea,
My Johnny lies over the fishes he's caught.

By Gad, what a liar is he!

"Now leave go out and watch the sunset," he said. I glanced at my watch, the one with the new crystal and the second-hand second-hand. One minute to sunset.

At this moment a queer figure appeared at the door. His roommate. I cannot describe him exactly, except that he reminded me of Napoleon somehow. You could almost picture Uncle Elby standing beside him.

"Hiya Slug, who's the mug?" he greeted. "Grab a seat, rest your feet," he told me.

Murgatroyd looked embarrassed. "This is Algie," he said.

Said Algie, "Ha! I heard, 'Said the bee to the plant, 'We're not married—I really can't!'"

I shot a sidelong glance at Murgatroyd. He was scribbling furiously. He shot a quick dart at me. I shot a barbed innuendo in his direction. It went over his head. But one more shot and he was writhing on the floor. He offered me a shot of bourbon.

"You can't bribe me, Murgatroyd," I told him. "I have found you out. Is it good bourbon?"

I saw the whole thing now. Algie was the poet; Murgatroyd was taking the credit. Thus it is that our heroes topple from their pedestals and crash about our heads till they lie in dust about our feet. I bowed my head in sorrow.

"I am sorry I came here, Murgatroyd," I said, "you have shattered my dreams."

"I feel like a heel," he said. I handed him my knife with the

Phantasmagoria

At the International Cinema on Yonge Street, east side, just south of Eglinton. The International Cinema is just what the name suggests, a theatre presenting films produced in or about foreign lands.

It is our sincere belief that the International Cinema management is to be highly commended for the choice of pictures presented in this theatre. Through their media we can learn about the people of other lands and in this manner we will be breaking down many barriers to international fraternity.

If every person that entertains suspicion of the Soviet were to see the current Short entitled "Golden Slippers", we believe that they would come away realizing that the Russian people have the same fundamental emotions as we do. The warm appeal of this picture certainly does a great deal towards furthering an understanding of the Russian people.

The International Cinema presents the unusual. The type of picture that you see there is the type of film that you go to see to be entertained and educated at the same time. If you are the intellectual type you will appreciate the deep is an excellent actor and a very affable character. The story of his life during the German occupation is worthy of note here. He was given the opportunity of going to Hollywood when it seemed certain that France would fall but he elected to remain in his boyhood France and he fought with great distinction with the underground.

The part of the Baker's young wife (Aurelle) is well played by Ginette Leclerc, who, although not a great beauty by Hollywood standards, is quite attractive. She is the psychology of the film, "The Baker's Wife". If you are the type that just goes to the show to be entertained you, too, will enjoy this picture for it is filled with humour and human interest, and we feel certain that you will be just as interested in the outcome of the Baker's matrimonial troubles as are his friends and neighbours. If you are an ex-serviceman who has "visited" France you will get a special "kick" out of this film as you will see your old friends the jovial French with the old familiar gestures and shrug of the shoulders, the practical outlook on life, the rapid talking, etc., etc.

The part of the Baker (Aimable Costantini) is superbly acted by Raimu, the Frenchman's Bob Hope and Charlie Chaplin combined. He typical vivacious French Gal, and certainly arouses interest.

The story is a simple one. But in its simplicity it is interesting. The Baker moves to a small southern town in provincial France to take the place of a predecessor who hanged himself after consistently making bread that contained cigar butts, string, etc.

The local Marquis comes with the

Speaking OF SPORT

(By ED. SOKOLOWSKI)

Athletic Council Meeting

The Athletic Council met last evening in the Athletic office to discuss the coming events of the month of May. One of the points brought up in the meeting was the business of obtaining crests for the individual players of the winning teams in inter-residence competition. To keep this in the spirit of Ajax it was decided to let any member of the student body submit a design for the crest. For students who have any ideas on any style, design or pattern for the crest, the Athletic office sponsors a contest for the most appropriate crest submitted and this crest will be the one given to the champs of any sport in inter-residence competition. A suggestion for the prize to the winner of the best crest designed is a lifetime pass to all games at Ajax. The crest is to be of one that bars can be added for each individual sport played at Ajax.

Another point brought up before the council was a mammoth Athletic Nite, only this time featuring all the local talent and corn. Each residence will be asked to contribute its talent and also its corn for the programme. Whether Barber Shop Quartet, Chorus Lines, Drama or Skits, all will be welcome for this great night. Fifi Carmaine (John Robson, Athletic Rep. of Res. 734) will again have the opportunity to charm the audience with her talents? Those interested in participating in this giant show are asked to contact their Athletic representative. Prizes will be awarded to the residence which puts on the best performance.

As an addition to the indoor entertainment, the Athletic office will bring out visiting teams in different sport to play on the Ajax sports field. Two girl's softball teams, preferably from Sunnyside and Danforth, will be here as well as the Beach's men's softball team to play against the Ajax softball team. The Athletic office also intend to invite for the evening the Rothchild's bowling team to compete against the Ajax champs, Residence 737A, eight tennis teams from the Toronto Golf and Tennis clubs and a Box Lacrosse team to give the Ajax lacrosse team a few pointers. All these sports will be played at approximately the same time as to give the spectators the chance to see their favorite sport. The entertainment in the Rec. Hall will be staged after all the outdoor games have ended. This Gigantic Athletic Nite will be Monday, June 3rd (after the Saturday of the Surveying exam.)

Knockout Tournament

For students who stay on the campus during week-ends and who are interested in tennis, a knockout tennis tournament will be organized Saturdays and Sundays. This will be only for doubles as not to congest the courts, and will commence this coming Saturday. This will continue till the winners are announced. The house Athletic representative

HORSESHOE SCHEDULE

Playing Rules
Many of the Horseshoe players have different ideas on the rules of this game. In order to avoid confusion as to the rules in playing this game a set of rules which Ajax will follow are printed below.
In delivering the shoe the pitcher shall stand within the pitcher's box but outside an eighteen (18) inch radius of the stake.
In delivering the shoe the pitcher must remain behind the foul line until the shoe pitched reaches the court at which it is delivered.

In successive games between same players, the loser shall have choice of pitch.
Each player shall deliver his two shoes in succession.
Scoring
Twenty-one (21) points will constitute a game. The best two in three games will be played.

A shoe must be within six (6) inches of a stake to score.
Closest shoe to stake scores 1 point, two shoes closer than opponent's 2 points, one (1) ringer scores 3 points, two (2) ringers scores 6 points.

All equals count as ties and no points are scored.
In case contestant is a ringer the next closest shoe if within six (6) inches shall score 1 point.

A leaning shoe has no value over one touching shoe.
Definition of a ringer
A ringer is declared when a shoe encircles the stake far enough to allow the touching of both heel calks, simultaneously with a straight edge, and permit a clearance of the stake.

First Lacrosse

The first box lacrosse to be seen in Ajax was played last night at 8.00 p.m. in the hockey cushions behind the Recreation Hall. All the spectators who were present enjoyed a very rough and hard-fought game.

Residence 722 defeated 727 by a score of 10 to 7. Watkins of Res. 722 topped the evening's goals scored by placing the Indian rubber ball (synthetic) past the goaltender six times. The outstanding player of the game was "Ozark" Olsen of Res. 727, scoring three goals and doing some very beautiful passing. "Ozark", from the city of St. Catharines, showed some good lacrosse technique in his style.

One more team is needed to have a lacrosse league in Ajax. Three teams of approximately twelve men each have submitted their names for the league and two organize a fair league. The Athletic office would like to have one more team.

Birth Of Yell The Toike Oike

Wherever Engineers are found, there is their yell. Be it at a football match, an election parade downtown, a coast-to-coast broadcast of their At-Home, or a Vic class party, there is the yell.

But where the yell came from, most people haven't the slightest idea.

Six years ago one of the faculty tried to chase it down. Finally he got a letter from Walter H. Boyd of the Dominion Department of Mines. In part it read:

"I remember quite well the birth of the School 'Yell'—Toike Oike. It came about in this way: a group of us, Stovel, Burnside, Carter, Piper, thought that the School should have a catchy yell that could be used on all occasions such as football matches, etc., and a triumphant yell of victory when we succeeded in stealing the bicycle racks from the Arts Building and for other such stirring occasions."

Apparently each one of the group above mentioned was to forget about books, slide-rules, results and formulae, and was to concentrate all mental effort on the composition of a yell—a yell which would stir the blood of the faint hearted, spur the tired to victory.

Immaturity Or Failure

By ROBERT WEAVER

Raymond Souster's When We Are Young (First Statement Press, Montreal, $1.00), the fourth publication in the interesting and progressive New Writers Series sponsored by the editors of Northern Review magazine, is unfortunately a distinct disappointment. Souster is a socially conscious poet, completely and somewhat noisily on the side of the angels, and his failure suggests that a simple reaction against the long-established subject matter of most Canadian poetry does not in itself provide an absolute guarantee of poetic merit. If in this review I stress Souster's faults to the possible exclusion of certain virtues, it is only that, in accepting his apparent honesty of intention, I feel particularly keenly the lack of something additional.

Most of this poetry is directed against profiteers ("the pot-belly guys"), against certain aspects of wartime life and service, in a larger and more lasting sense against dreary jobs and a generally inhibited and sterile social existence. The usual fashions of relief are recorded; fleeting moments of country beauty, the loss of self under the beat of jazz, the release of sexual tension. It is all right enough and true enough within a limited context; yet specific instance is never transformed into generally relevant tragedy. The poetry is always something less than the obviously tortured sensibility of the poet; parts are suddenly truer and purer than any single whole.

Even the apparently simple concreteness of sex is finally a trap: its reaction tears apart the memory of an instant, and the poet is left to "Wonder why it is not the same, why it is no good, no good at all, No good at all, and how long you, can you go on fooling yourself about the others,

How long before the emptiness will go, or will it always go on killing and aching and crying here in the darkness."

(from "Ersatz")

For the rest, Souster has the knack of juxtaposing outhouse expressions and a native sensitivity: it is only one reflection of a violent and curiously perverse romanticism which places him with so many of his contemporaries. The quote from Hemingway becomes significant. Souster can be banal: "Closer to fear and death and agony without a name" (from "The Invader"). My emphasis; and frequently he is nearer to prose than poetry.

Any specific weakness must, however, remain merely incidental to the central problem. As a poet concerned primarily with criticism of the present social order, Souster implies the existence of certain alternative criteria of his own. Yet, apparently not nearly at peace even with himself, he tends to purely emotional and self-destructive hatred of a system which, whatever else it may be, is thoroughly hardened against the cries of outraged sensibility. Before he can hope to clarify the way for others, he needs a light himself.

Souster is young, and we may possibly assume that many of his problems are directly linked with this fact. But the poems in When We Are Young show no substantial improvement when compared with those published in Unit of Five several years ago. It would be equally fatal for Souster to accept an absolutely dogmatic social theory. It is only that Souster seems likely to remain a minor creative force, if he insists on continuing to write socially conscious poetry without finding a broader and less completely immediate approach. And I think the least we can now do is attempt to impress this possibility upon him.

Phantasmagoria

rest of the villagers on the opening day and after seeing the new Baker's bread he tells him that his shepherd will call every day for 30 loaves. The shepherd (Dominique) is the last to be served and Aurelie makes a successful play for Dominique behind the Baker's back. That night the shepherd and two of his friends serenade Aurelie. The unsuspecting Baker thinks that they are thanking him for his good bread. He sends Aurelie downstairs to give them something to eat. It is then that the shepherd and Aurelie make plans to run away.

The next morning the Baker is awakened by the smoke of his bread that has burnt as Aurelie did not waken him. From here on the story is about the efforts of all to get the Baker's wife back so that he can again cook good bread. The story of the concerted efforts of all the townsfolk, the attitude of the Baker, etc., all go to make a story full of human interest and, as we said before, one that will absorb your interest. The photography and sound are quite good.

On the same programme is a Russian Short entitled "Golden Slippers"—presented by Artkino and produced at the Almo Star Studios in Russia. This film features some very fine solo and choral singing, in extracts from the Tchaikovsky opera, "Cherevichi". The story is a very appealing little folk-tale about the courtship of Oxana, the village belle, by Vakula, the blacksmith.

The story opens Xmas Eve in a small Ukrainian village. The young folk of the town are gaily dancing festive dances, when Oxana arrives on a sleigh announcing in beautiful song that her house has been burgled. She stops to admire the decorated boots of one of the girls and proclaims that she has no one to give her nice things like that. Then Vakula sings that he will give her the prettiest pair in the land. She says that the only pair that would suit her would be a pair of the Empress's slippers and if he gets her those she will marry him. Then she toys with him and he becomes dejected and proclaims to the world at large that he is going to commit suicide for he loves her but she shows no interest in him.

The scene shifts to a local forest where we see poor Vakula pouring forth his soul telling us how he has decided to end it all because it seems impossible for him to get the golden slippers. Just then a black-faced devil appears and jumps on Vakula's back but Vakula overcomes him using some very amusing tail-pulling tactics. The devil pleads for his life and promises Vakula anything he wants. The rest of the story is taken up by showing how Vakula gets the slippers and wins Oxana as his wife. The entire picture is excellent and is an absolute "must" for all lovers of Tchaikovsky music. The quality of the photography is equal to anything Hollywood has produced and the sound is excellent.

"The Baker's Wife" and "Golden Slippers" stay at the International Cinema for a second week.

Incidentally, if you feel that because you do not speak Russian or French, that you would not understand the story you are wrong. The dialogue is on the screen in the form of English sub-titles and the story is very easy to follow. You are not conscious of the fact that you are reading instead of hearing.

SAN ANTONIO

Those of you who are horse opera fans will enjoy seeing this colourful extravaganza portrayal of the empire builders of the America's old west, now being shown at the Tivoli Theatre in Toronto. This is something more than "the wild and woolly west" as it has a little historical background attached to the story. The story is about the town of San Antonio, in the early pages of American history, and it's fight to protect the striving community from gamblers and rustlers who plundered the countryside.

Errol Flynn has his usual sophisticated role and plays the part of Clay Hardin, who was shot up by Roy Stewart in previous plunderings. The latter was owner of the notorious saloon the "Belle Union" and also the rustler of the country

Stop and Go

Although this has nothing to do with sports it should be of interest to all students. The Royal Alexandra Theatre will present one of the year's smartest Musical Comedies with a cast of 125 and featuring 40 Principals, Singing Ensemble, Dancing Girls, Catchy Songs and Witty Sketches. All of the numbers in this Revue are the best acts chosen from a great many of the entertainment groups who put these shows on for the servicemen during the war. This collection of the best in entertainment should prove to be very enjoyable. Many servicemen may recognize a few of these skits as ones they have seen while in the service. Ajax, being composed mostly of servicemen, has been given priority to obtain tickets to see the season's show "Stop and Go." The Athletic Representatives have the applications to obtain tickets for this terrific show and all students are advised to apply for tickets as soon as possible.

Holmes-Dr. Watson mystery and this time the two super-sleuths track down a murderer and recover the jewels. The jewel, most precious in the collection was the "Star of Rhodesia" and the sleuths Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce did the most impossible in capturing "scooping" Scotland Yard who were the criminals and in completely also on the case.

Holmes draws the most remarkable conclusions from very little evidence and of course Watson can tell what killed a man, whose body shows no marks of violence, simply by looking at him. The whole picture takes place on a fast London-Edinburgh Express. Inspector Serard was made a fool of by the heroes but they do let him capture the accomplices in the crime.

Both these pictures were in the same program and there being so different helped make it most enjoyable one. Both these pictures are now playing at an uptown theatre in Toronto. There is also on the same program a cartoon about a cat and a bird.

and ring out as a triumphant battle-cry.

In due time, the fruits of each one's labours were examined. Each yell was practised; each yell was judged. The choice was Piper's "Toike Oike". Apparently the words "Toike Oike" were coined by the yell's author especially for that purpose.

The other part starting with "We are! We are . . ." and stretching on down to all those naughty words was imported from some unknown engineering campus, and together the two come down to the present day after echoing across Canada and around the world since the turn of the century.

Ajax Rumblings

With earlier breakfast the boys should find time for a bit of early morning study. There won't be as many baring in when classes are half way over which is sometimes quite annoying to the others.

Horseshoe pitches have been put up behind most of the residences for the boys to while away the long summer evenings.

The motion picture machines are not in yet but we are still hoping they will be here before the exams begin while we still are able to enjoy motion pictures.

Maclaren Tells Of Harvest Employment

A Farm Service meeting was held in the Recreation Hall on Wednesday night to discuss farm work for the coming summer vacation. The small number present did not warrant an address by A. Maclaren and the meeting took the form of a round table.

The purpose of the meeting was to ascertain the number of students available for work in the harvest season and to invite questions concerning the project.

Workers will be allocated to camps according to the type of work they wish to do. The work consists of harvesting fruit and picking vegetables and there are also openings for placement on mixed farms.

Applicants, when applying, are to state that they are university students; otherwise they may be placed with a group of teen-agers who are subject to regulations concerning camp hours.

A working day will consist of approximately ten hours but if desirous a person can work overtime. Pay is fifty cents an hour and from this five dollars a week is deducted for board.

The camps are placed central to the farms and are equipped with double-deck bunks, showers, and hot and cold running water. Breakfast and supper are eaten in camp and a lunch is carried to work. The farmer calls at the camp and collects his help who are covered by group insurance from the time they board the farmer's vehicle until they return to camp in the evening. Camps are scattered throughout the Niagara Peninsula.

Pamphlets on the subject with application forms attached will be available in the near future. Applications are not binding but a cancellation notice would be appreciated if a worker is not able to attend. The application form will have a space for dates for which each individual would be available. Any queries are to be taken to the S.A.C. office.

S. A. C. Bulletins

RE LOANS

A number of students have recently approached the S.A.C. office, Ajax, desiring immediate loans.

It would be appreciated if all those who anticipate that they will be in need of funds would bring the matter to the attention of the S.A.C. as early as possible.

All loan applications must be referred to the Toronto office, and while the S.A.C. will do anything in their power to expedite the matter in cases of urgency, it will normally require several days before a cheque is received from Toronto.

RE HOUSING

The S.A.C. office has presently available a small number of light housekeeping facilities for married students. Anyone interested is requested to apply to the S.A.C. Office, Hart House, at his earliest convenience.

FINAL EDITION

The final Ajax Edition of The Varsity will make its appearance on Friday, June 14. It will be an eight-page edition and will contain pictures and features, as well as last-minute news.

Any of the students who have any ideas for stories, Champus Cats, etc., are asked to get them in to The Varsity office as soon as possible.

MACMILLAN TO PERFORM

The beautiful Music Room in Hart House Ajax will be formally opened by a recital by Sir Ernest MacMillan and Ellie Spivak on the night of Wednesday May 23. Tickets may be obtained today in the office of the Supervisor of Hart House Ajax. It is suggested that you do not delay in obtaining your tickets in order that you may be ensured of a seat for this worth-while occasion. It is not every day that the opportunity is presented of hearing Sir Ernest MacMillan in recital and so that the occasion may be more fully appreciated a short history of the life of this famous Canadian is herewith presented.

Sir Ernest, an Accomplished Musician

Sir Ernest Campbell MacMillan, B.A. (U. of T.); D. Mus., (Oxford); LL.D. (U.B.C.); F.R.C.M.; F.R.C.O.; Vice President of the Royal College of Organists, London England; conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra; conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir; principal of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, and Dean of the Faculty of Music at the University of Toronto, was born in Mimico on the 18th of August 1893.

He was educated at Jervis Collegiate in Toronto; View Park College, Edinburgh; he obtained his Doctorate of Music from Oxford University and his B.A. from the University of Toronto. He was knighted in 1935 by the late King George V for his contribution and service to Canadian Music.

An Organist of Renown

He began his career as a concert organist at the age of ten, and he now enjoys recognition throughout the North American continent. He was on a concert tour in Europe in 1914 and was in Bayreuth when war broke out. He was interned in Germany for four years during which time he earned his Doctorate of Music. He has gained distinction as a composer and has been a guest conductor of many well known musical organizations such as the Philadelphia Orchestra and the New York Symphony Orchestra.

He was on a concert tour in Australia last summer and is going on tour in South America this summer. In 1926 Sir Ernest succeeded Dr.

Vogt as principal of the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

Toronto Musician

It has not been possible to obtain many facts about Ellie Spivak but he is the concert master of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the First Violinist of the Conservatory Quartet. His son David conducted the T.S.O. for the Xmas concert, 1945. Ellie Spivak studied under Brodsky.

Programme

The following is the programme that Sir Ernest and Mr. Spivak will present at their concert.

Beethoven... Sonata No. 7, in C Minor, Op. 39. No. 2 for Violin and Piano.

Group of violin solos... Kreisler... Præluclium and Allegro Chopin-Sarasate... Nocturne in E Flat.

Flat. Kreisler... Tambourin Chinois.

INTERMISSION

César Franck... Sonata in A Major for Violin and Piano.

And a final caution—Don't Forget To Get Tickets Today. This will be one of the musical events of the year so—YOU CAN'T MISS IT.

C. D. HOWE SPEAKER AT AJAX DINNER

Coming June 12th

HON. C. D. HOWE

Who will be guest speaker at the Engineering Society banquet on Wednesday, June 12th.

Summer Dance At Hart House

Mr. Emmond announced last night that Ellis McClintock and his band has been obtained for the Hart House Summer Dance which is to be held in Hart House, Toronto, on June 14th.

The ticket price has been set at two dollars a couple. At a committee meeting held a few days ago one member made the motion that the price be raised in order to restrict the crowd. This motion was defeated. Instead, it was decided to work on a quota system. Only a limited number of tickets will be sold, and the sale will be open only to Ajax students.

Since it will be (in all probability) the last big social event of the year a large attendance is expected. At that time the final exams will be only six weeks away.

Ellis McClintock has one of Toronto's largest and best bands. Most of his musicians were formerly Mart Kenney's Western Gentlemen. With this great band and the facilities of Hart House Toronto, the dance is expected to rank high amongst this year's events.

Traditional Banquet To Be Held In Cafeteria

Minister of Reconstruction Guest Speaker

The Honorable C. D. Howe, Minister of Reconstruction, will be the guest speaker at the School Dinner to be held on June 12th at Ajax. The announcement was made yesterday by the executive of the Engineering Society.

The dinner will take place in the cafeteria starting at approximately 6:30 p.m. Other speakers will be Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University; Dr. C. R. Young, Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering; Col. Phillips, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the University; and Michael J. McAuliffe, President of the Engineering Society, Ajax.

Dining Hall Pandemonium

Haystack—May 19.—(Special to The Varsity).

Consternation reigned in the main dining-room of the Haystack Cafeteria today as a blast of undetermined origin shattered the quiet of the late lunch hour and startled the few late patrons who were there at the time.

A moment before the detonation, all had been calm and peaceful as engineers chatted over their farmers' sausage and creamed celery. The next instant, the west end of the cafeteria exploded and seemed to dissolve into dense fumes of sulphurous smoke which hid the scene of the tragedy. The air was rent with screams of terror as engineers and cafeteria staff rushed to the exit doors.

Within half an hour, the smoke had cleared sufficiently to allow searchers to comb the ruins but no bodies have been found as yet.

The cause of the explosion is still unknown at the time of going to press but an unidentified observer states that there is reason to believe that it was a Mining Engineering student who had been studying too hard for the final tests in Qualitative Analysis. This report has been neither confirmed nor denied.

Further information will be printed in a special late edition as soon as such information is received.

CAMERA CONTEST CLOSES

Following the announcement that a camera contest was to be held at Hart House some 16 enthusiastic photographers entered 75 snapshots up till 5:30 p.m. last night. There is a great variety of pictures amongst the entries.

The results will be announced as soon as the judges have carefully scrutinized the entries and it is hoped there will be an interesting photographic exhibit in the near future.

JAXERS REPRESENTED AT NORVAL CONFERENCE

The Student Christian Movement in the University of Toronto will hold a Conference at Norval from tonight (Friday) until Thursday evening, May 23rd. While the SCM is not yet organized on this campus, a representative consisting of Andy Matthews, Doug Bassett, Bob Diebel, Arnold McGinn and Murray Pond will attend during the week-end.

SURVEYING EXAMS

The Faculty Office has announced that the final exams in Surveying will be held on Saturday, June 1 in the morning. Details as to time and seating arrangements will be announced later.

"When we spoke to Mr. Howe last Friday, he said that he would be 'only too pleased' to speak at Ajax," said M. J. McAuliffe in making the announcement of the dinner. "We have every hope of establishing a precedent for good dinners that can be carried on through the years at Ajax. With the committees we have lined up to organize the evening there is no doubt of its success."

A Former Engineer

A graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and formerly a professor at Dalhousie University, Halifax, Mr. Howe is one of the two engineers in the Dominion Cabinet. As Minister of Munitions and Supply during the war, he had much to do with the building of D.I.L., Ajax.

"I am very interested in seeing how the munitions plant was converted into a large branch of a university," commented Mr. Howe. "I have never visited Ajax, although I have seen it from the air."

G. W. Beatty, Vice-President of the Engineering Society, is in charge of the various committees that have been set up to take care of all the arrangements necessary for the evening. G. O. Machum is in charge of the sale of tickets; publicity will be handled by Ray Wakefield; decoration by J. M. Howes and D. G. Pyper; and property by R. A. McClenahan and D. J. Brown.

"The tickets are not on sale as yet but will be as soon as they come from the printers," said Machum. "As the cafeteria cannot hold the entire student body those intending to attend are advised to obtain tickets as soon as they are made available."

Every faculty holds an annual dinner toward the end of the scholastic year. In future years the dinners will be a combined event taking in the entire faculty. Since Ajax is operating on a different timetable from the rest of Skule for this year only it was necessary to hold a special dinner to mark the end of the year.

CLASS ROOM COMMENT

Heard in Chemistry Lecture
 Lecturer—There are over fifty tons of water over a square mile area of ground.

Voice from back—Gee, I hope it doesn't fall!

In Calculus Class

Lecturer—Logarithms may be taken to any base.

Voice from side—How about first, second, and third?

In Engineering and Society

Lecturer—There are several reasons why the Spaniards gave up fishing on the Grand Banks.

Voice from other side—They ran out of worms.

In Analytical Geometry

Lecturer—The ellipse is found in the orbits of certain planets.

Voice from front—I guess that's why we have an ellipse of the sun!

In M. & Th.M.

Lecturer—What is the chief use of the polar planimeter?

Voice from back—To locate the North pole!

In Statics Class

Lecturer—Now we come to take up Pappus' theorem.

Voice from side—Leave your parents out of this!

In Physics Class

Lecturer—Nuclear fission is not a common occurrence.

Voice from other side—What about trout fishin'?

In Dynamics Lecture

Lecturer—What do we know about the Law of Gravity?

Voice—It was passed by the British Parliament in 1634.

In Electricity Lecture

Lecturer—We are going to plot the various characteristics of different types of cores.

Voice—Apple, armoured, or dilecti?

In English Class

Lecturer—We are now going to discuss the importance of speaking clearly.

Voice from back—Louder please.

In Descriptive Geometry

Lecturer—When do we use auxiliary planes?

Voice again—When the regular planes are out of gas.

At a House Meeting

President—And that brings up the subject of breakfast.

Familiar voice—It's all we can do to keep breakfast down!

In M. & Th.M.

Lecturer—What do we use a micrometer for?

Unfamiliar voice—It makes a good monkey wrench.

In Analytical Geometry

Lecturer—What is the chief property of focal chords?

Subto voice—I use mine to sing with.

Melinda Advises

Dear Melinda,

My brother recently brought home a copy of Tolke Oike which contained an article about the Woolzel number. I should like to be more popular and I think if I can find out my number and improve it I can get increase my number of dates from eight per week to fourteen.

Could you please, tell me what my number is?

I am a blonde, eleven and a half hands tall and weigh eight stories. I enjoy dancing, walking, car riding, male companionship and other things.

My bust measurement is 36 inches, my waist is 26, and I am 36 inches at the hips.

I wear a bright red sweater and my dress is one quarter inch above my knees.

Could you tell me what my Woolzel number is?

Isabel.

Dear Isabel,

I am very sorry to say that in spite of all the information you have provided it is not possible to determine your Woolzel number.

However it is possible to refer you to some of the gentlemen (?) at Ajax who would be only too glad to

Piano Recital

One of the best record hours to date, was heard Sunday evening, May 12th, at 8 o'clock in the Music Room of Hart House. Those who were present, sat back in the comfortable chairs and enjoyed a good selection of piano composition played by great concert pianists.

The favorite selection of the evening, "Rhapsody on a Theme" by Paganini; played by Rachmaninoff, and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and the "Concerto No. 2 in C-Minor" by Rachmaninoff and played by the composer and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Selections also enjoyed during the evening were "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" by Bach and played by

If you apply at the S.A.C. office at Ajax and contact Mr. Makaloff and give him your phone number, he could make the necessary arrangements for an appointment.

Should you be able to spend a week-end at the lake a more accurate determination should be possible, although a fairly close approximation to three decimal places could be made in the course of an evening.

John Garfield,
Eleanor Parker, Dane Clark

Myra Hess, "Berceuse in D-flat major" by Chopin and rendered by Brallowsky and the Etude in G-major Op. 10 No. 5 by Chopin and played by Horowitz.

During the 5-minute intermission the students had refreshments in the Tuck Shop. Then they came back to listen to "Campanella" by Paganini and Liszt and played by Paderewski, and more of Chopin's selections were heard. The Concerto No. 2 in C-minor was the final number for the evening.

Mr. C. P. Brock, the arranger of the program, was quite pleased with the two loudspeakers now used in the Music Room. He also says that many new recordings were on order and they are expected to arrive soon.

Art, Music and Drama

Tuesday evening the second of the summer series of Promenade concerts was presented by the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra before a near-capacity audience of some 6,000 persons. The programme was fairly well received, and the soloist, Jean Dickenson was the recipient of enthusiastic applause.

The programme consisted of Overture to "Oberon" by Weber; Classical Symphony by Prokofiev; Overture to an Imaginary Drama (First Performance) by Robert Russell Bennett; Rosenkavalier Waltzes by Richard Strauss; Suite for Strings by A. Corelli; Finale from Tchaikowsky's Fifth Symphony; these and Jean Dickenson singing Arias with Orchestra—Theme and Variations (Nursery-Rhyme) by Mozart-Adam; Que la voce from "I Puritani" by Bellini; Blue Danube Waltz by Johann Strauss; and three songs with Pianoforte. As an encore the orchestra played a delightful pizzicato.

Fritz Mahler is a dynamic leader! The power and feeling that he puts into his conducting can only be observed at close range. He has good control although inclined to be a trifle unrestrained during solo renditions.

The extraneous noises caused by so many people coming in late made it difficult to hear the "Oberon" Overture (which is quiet anyway), and the first part of the Prokofiev Symphony. In addition the rudeness that part of the audience exhibited by leaving the Arena immediately upon the conclusion of the Finale causing an undesirable "buzz" and "murmur" during the rendition of the pizzicato encore called forth the comment that it was typical of a Toronto audience

(ED SOKOLOWSKI)

Fishing

Now that the fishing season is open, many of the morning lectures may be short some students as there are quite a few good fishing spots within an hour's ride from Ajax. The fishermen of Ajax may already know of a few of these locations and have paid a visit to these spots. Rice Lake fishing. This lake is very popular by the fact that every one for miles around have tried their luck there and have had a successful fishing trip. Kawartha Lake in Peterborough County is another fisherman's paradise with various types of fish to suit each individual taste. Bass, pike, pickerel, trout, and many others have made Kawartha Lake their home.

On the highway running north from Port Hope to Lindsay there are many summer resorts which are very good for fishing. Haliburton, a summer and winter resort has many small lakes surrounding it which all the sportsmen visit regularly every season. The spot for the large 'lunge' is Fenelon Falls. The fishers for this fish will have to wait a little while as the 'lunge' season does not open until July. The Black River near Lindsay is teeming with trout and these trout have given many sportsmen a fight they can boast about. Many of these spots have been the scene of Gregory Clark's and Jimmy Frise's adventures and the Ajax students will never regret having taken a Descriptive Geometry period off for the sport of fishing.

No Corn Available

The last issue of The Varsity in this column it was noted that at the next Athletic Nite, the engineers talent from Ajax would be featured. But unfortunately only a few residences can boast of having talent. There was not enough acts for a whole programme so the Athletic office are arranging for a show to come out from Toronto and far better than any that have previously visited Ajax. The sport program is still scheduled to be here for that evening.

Out of Bounds

The Athletic office have requested that no students use the tennis courts during the hours from 8:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. as the workmen usually roll the courts and do other necessary repairs during those hours.

One of the courts that are in the process of being built is expected to be ready in a week's time and the other in two weeks.

What No Shoes?

There are now horseshoe pits behind some of the residences but no horseshoes. So if any Jaxer wishes to relieve the pressure from his brain (?) with a game of horseshoes, there will be about ten sets of shoes available at the Athletic office. Ask the house athletic representative to obtain these from the office.

First Blood

The lacrosse league at Ajax will commence Wednesday, May 22nd in the No. 1 hockey cushion with the four teams playing that evening. The four teams are from Residences 722, 724, 727 and 733. Due to the fact that there are only a few lacrosse fans here the teams will be allowed to draw players from other residences. These two games should prove very interesting to anyone wanting to see a fast and rough game.

APOLOGIES

Sorry, folks, but last week we made a mistake. The new S.A.C. Representative is Mr. R. S. "Bob" Irwin.

Engineering Mathematics

By J. F. FYDELL

While many engineers will be quite familiar with the WOZZEL NUMBER and its derivation, many will be less familiar with the "G" factor which plays an important part in its determination.

The "G" Factor, often called "Wolf's Number" because of the valuable data gathered by the research of a brilliant engineer R.U.A. Wolf is more properly termed the "Gamma" or "Gam Factor" or to women as "Glamour".

Any intelligent engineer is aware that no two pair of limbs which flit across the field of view of his transit are exactly alike. In the first place no two pair are proportioned exactly the same. Then, if two pair of similar proportions were to appear, they would not have the same effect, the difference being due to the sheathing substance. Thus, for instance, a pair sheathed in silk or nylons would have a far greater effect than a pair sheathed in cotton or wool.

Lately, with the discovery of the benzodiaminophthalen family, which provided an excellent paint for limbs, the picture became even more complicated for many limbs covered with the compound are frequently observed.

Through the patient efforts of Mr. Wolf, certain relationships were definitely established.

First, the effects were proportional to the C to A ratio. In brief, this is the ratio between the circumference of the calf, to the circumference of the ankle, both of these being measured in circular spans. (A span is the distance measured from the thumb to the second finger. If this distance is measured along a straight line it is known as a linear span; if measured around the circumference of an object it is known as a circular span.) By using circular instead of linear span we eliminate the factor of Pi. However, this ratio represents a function which has both maximum and minimum values and therefore the first derivative must be taken, to obtain the slope of the curve.

The second factor is the sheathing factor. This is relatively simple to obtain and can be obtained by inspection. Thus silk has a much higher value than cotton. This value is a constant for the material. Roughly speaking, then, if the constant for cotton is 0.01, the constant for silk will be 0.01 log 2 raised to the power of 100 divided by 2, which will give a much greater constant. This is represented by "K". Cotton has a value of 0.01, silk 70 and nylon 80.

Combining these two factors we arrive at the "G" Factor which is equal to K times the sin of the angle whose tangent is equal to the "Calf to Ankle" ratio.

As the G factor varies with the various materials it is customary to denote these by subscripts; thus G subscript "s" indicates the G factor for silk sheathed limbs; G subscript "n" is the factor for Nylons, G subscript "c" the factor for cotton, and G subscript "o" for bare limbs.

The further study of this subject offers a very interesting and profitable field for research and it is expected that Jaxmen will make great contributions to man's knowledge of this subject in the future.

D.I.L. Firemen Protect School

By ED. SOKOLOWSKI

A few students, having found the results of their Easter examinations unsatisfactory, have left the university and are now employed in positions other than on engineering work. There are several others who are now thinking of leaving Ajax but are not altogether sure of the type of work they would like. Of course, the obvious question to ask themselves is "What do I do best", but then they are reminded of the fact that you can't make money sitting under a shady tree with a blonde to fan your brow periodically.

So they think and they think but to no avail as they are Engineers, childhood daze with their boyhood and they are carried back to their ambitions. If they are like most fellows they think of driving a street car, joining the foreign legion, running away to sea, or maybe becoming a fireman—say wait a minute—how about becoming a fireman? Well, what kind of a job have the Ajax firemen got?

The fire department at Ajax is a good example of an efficient and smoothly run department. This department came with the inception of the D.I.L. in the fall of 1941 and

SURVEYING EXAMS

In view of the proximity of the big day when the students write their final examinations in surveying, a Swami of our acquaintance has ventured to predict that a close inspection of residence waste baskets will reveal numerous sheets scrawled over with six place logs, lats and depts, and that Surveying Instructors can prepare themselves for a sudden popularity.

Art, Music and Drama

that once the performance appeared to be over could think of naught but their hurry to get home.

As far as the actual playing of the programme is concerned there is not much to criticize. There was just the slightest "fuzz" amongst the violins during the allegro movement of the Prokofieff Symphony but at all other times the entire string section seemed to be well trained and quite capable. The synchronism was good and enthusiasm seemed to be high (particularly one member of the cellos). The brasses and winds were better than last week, particularly the trumpets.

The first two selections did not go over as well as the remainder of the programme, partially due to the restlessness of the audience at the time.

The Overture to an Imaginary Drama was not as good as had been hoped—the audience very unresponsive in spite of a very loud and jazz-like brass passage.

Rosenkavalier Waltzes and the Suite for Strings were beautifully rendered and appreciated by a now attentive audience.

Jean Dickenson made a most favourable impression in a beautiful yellow satin gown and glistening tiara. She appeared to be happy and delighted in the audience's approval. She put her whole heart into her singing and facial expressions and gesticulations. Once it appeared as though a flicker of fatigue flashed across her face while she rested between numbers but her singing did not bear this out.

From the moment that she entered the Arena she captured the hearts of the audience. Her rendition of the Theme and Variations with its frivolous play between flautist and singer delighted the audience. "Come Let's Be Merry" and "Rose Sortly Blooming" were most entertaining but the "Margherita Polka" was by far the best of the three songs. It was so well presented that Miss Dickenson was recalled by a loudly approving six thousand. Leo Barkin as accompanist was excellent, he never failed to give that last little fling of his hand at the end of each song.

The Blue Danube was beautifully sung and the crowd clamoured for her return. No encore was given as the programme was being broadcast and leader Mahler was forced to begin the Finale while applause still echoed through the Arena. It was unfortunate that the orchestra managed to "drown her out" during this number.

Next week Percy Grainger comes to the Prom playing his own "Youthful Suite" for the first time in Canada and Addinsell's "Warsaw Concerto" plus the American Concertette No. 1 by Morton Gould. On the same programme will be Violet Archer's "Brittani" overture, English Gothic Music, Shepher Fennels Dance by Gardiner and Godfrey Ridout's Ballade for Viola and Orchestra.

Arrive before Eight.

D. B. Jolly.

ART DISPLAY

An interesting exhibit of the work of The Society of Painter-Etchers is now on display in the Common Room of Hart House, Ajax. This professional organization was founded in 1916 as an offshoot of The Toronto Art Students' League and has such notable members as C. W. Jeffreys. Their work represents all the techniques of Graphic Art from coloured prints to the more severe black and white etchings.

The student will probably enjoy this exhibit as this art is of an illustrative nature. The portrayal of the subject is both dramatic and illustrative.

A number of sketches are of architectural interest, and M. P. Macdonald in particular, has often used the sea as his setting. An excellent bit of colorful work is that of Ann A. Smith; "Young Plant," a linoleum prints. Of unusual interest is "Minuet in G," by Fred Hagan which is a good study of composition.

The subjects are all of a simple nature and the manner of portraying them varies from exquisite detail to extreme simplicity.

Since these prints can be reproduced you may notice that many of them are for sale at a modest price.

South is the unhappy contractor of a little slam, not doubled, in spades. How or why he got there is no concern of ours. Suffice it to say that the contract was well bid and can be made easily. South, when his partner proudly lays down his beautiful mess of aces, kings, queens and stuff, looks the situation over with a slightly jaundiced eye. (None of his finesses have worked since the day he kicked that little yellow dog which was swiping his stew from his plate in the cookhouse (pardon—cafeteria).)

His problem is this—should he finesse the queen of spades or not and if so, which way. East, co-operative soul, opens with his club ace, and then leads a small club. This trick is taken by north's king. South now has three choices; he can finesse to the king—jack in his hand, or to the ace—ten on the board, or he can hope and pray for a three—two split with the queen being in the short end. Meanwhile he can offer a prayer of gratitude that west did not lead a diamond. South is in the spot as nothing ever works for him.

However, being an intelligent and resourceful lad (an Eng. Phys. type) he borrows a copy of Eshbach from a kindly kibitzer. Eshbach, alas, in his exhaustive treatise on bridge confines himself to cantilevers and trusses and suchlike uninteresting topics.

Our hero now bethinks himself of a theory he had read about once in the effect that a queen will usually be found in the hand to the right of the jack. It is based on the possibility that the queen and the jack of the same suit might have fallen in that order and in the previous deal they may not have been split. South decides to discard this idea. (It never works for yours truly either).

As a last resort, south, being an engineer, decides to use common sense, and he employs this in the following way:

West did not double;
West held the aces of clubs;
If west also held the queen of spades would he not have doubled?
Therefore, east must have the queen of spades, and lo and behold south's finesse works.

moved from Carter Hall. They have kept a splendid record ever since.

The duty of this department is to prevent fires rather than fight them. The frequent inspections carried out by the department and the efficient way the buildings were managed kept the fires down to a minimum. There have been small fires in the area that could have developed into vast conflagrations that would have caused considerable damage had it not been for the alertness of the fire department.

There are fourteen men on the Ajax staff, working in twelve-hour shifts. They are constantly on the alert for any signs of fire, which might prove extremely dangerous owing to the nature of construction of the various buildings. ALEXANDER HONORED

Outstanding Career Of Field Marshall

LEADER IN TUNISIA TO RECEIVE DEGREE

Canada's Governor-General is a soldier of no mean ability. On more than one occasion during the country's darkest hours he proved himself a hero as well as a great soldier and man.

Although the family traces its roots back to Scottish and English origins, Canada's new Governor-General is of immediate Irish ancestry and he was born in Tyrone County, Ireland, the third son of the Earl of Caledon.

In keeping with the military tradition of his family, who with only two exceptions have been soldiers for generations as far back as the famous Captain Andrew Alexander, he was sent to school at Sandhurst at the age of ten. He took a great interest in sports and although he was exceptional in none, he was good in them all. Later he distinguished himself in 1914 when he became the Irish amateur mile champion.

His military career began when he was commissioned as an ensign in H.M. Irish Guards and during the First World War he saw active service and won many honours. Good fortune followed him; he went "over the top" thirty times and was wounded only twice.

The end of the war came in 1918 and the young "soldier of fortune" who had emerged as a brigade commander, accepted a colonelcy offered him by President Paderewski head of the Polish Government. While serving in Poland he came into contact with the Russians and Germans and at one time led a German Battalion. He was able to claim the distinction of being the first Britisher to command a German Battalion.

In 1931 he married Lady Margaret Diana Bingham, a daughter of the Earl of Lucan.

During World War II when France collapsed he succeeded Lord Gort at Dunkirk and was in charge of the evacuation. During the crisis he insisted on holding up the last boat waiting to take him back to safety while he toured the beaches to make sure that all men were evacuated.

A second time he was assigned the unsavoury task of leading a retreat when two badly weakened divisions were isolated in Burma. With no other supplies than those they could carry he succeeded in leading his forces through the difficult mountain country of Northern Burma. In spite of all these difficulties and the fact that they were greatly outnumbered by the Japanese, he brought his men out into safety.

The North Africa campaign gave him the opportunity of turning the tables on the enemy. From El Alamein he led the British Eighth Army which struck the blow to Rommel's famous Afrika Korps in Tunisia. During that time the General made his headquarters in a caravan which served both as an office and sleeping quarters.

He was given command of the Italian campaign which ended in the German collapse in Northern Italy.

His method developed during the retreat from Mons in the First World War was to train his men, thoroughly and with extreme care down to the last and most minute detail. While he expected much from them, he never made any demands on them which he was not ready to carry out himself. During times of crisis he was extremely meticulous about his personal neatness and went about the beaches of Dunkirk and the jungles of Burma immaculate in his boots, rubbed to a mirror-like polish.

EX-SERVICE MEN TO BE PRESENTED

Luncheon at Hart House

His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada, Field Marshal Viscount Alexander of Tunis and Viscountess Alexander of Tunis will visit the University of Toronto on their first official visit to Toronto on Thursday, May 23.

Two big events will mark their visit to the University. The first will be a luncheon held in their honour in the Great Hall of Hart House, at 12:30 p.m. At 3:00 p.m. a Convocation will be held for the purpose of conferring the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon His Excellency, the Governor-General.

The luncheon, is being given by the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto. The guests of honour will be 50 ex-service students all of whom have had service in the theatre of war and most of whom have served under Field Marshall Alexander in Northern Africa and Italy.

Immediately preceding the luncheon, ten of the number will be presented to the Governor-General and Viscountess Alexander by the President of the University of Toronto.

All ex-service students invited to the luncheon will be in uniform. Permission for the wearing of uniforms has been obtained from the heads of the three services.

Other guests at the luncheon will be members of the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto, the Deans of the various Faculties, heads of the Colleges and Schools, the Students' Administrative Council and the board of directors of the Alumni Federation.

At 2:30 p.m. the luncheon will adjourn to Convocation Hall where the Convocation will be held, for the purpose of conferring the degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa) upon Field Marshall Alexander.

The Governor General will also address the Convocation.

The ex-service students attending the luncheon in uniform will be seated in special reserved section in Convocation Hall, Section K.

The members of the Students' Administrative Council will take part in the academic procession and will assemble in Examination Hall.

Students at Ajax and Queen's Park may obtain tickets for themselves and their families from the S.A.C. Offices in Hart House Ajax and Hart House University of Toronto.

Students to Be Presented

The following ex-service students are being presented to Their Excellencies, The Governor-General of Canada and Viscountess Alexander of Tunis by the President of The University prior to the luncheon given by the Board of Governors of the University in Hart House, Thursday, May 23rd, at 12:30 p.m. in Honour of Their Excellencies' visit.

To Be Broadcast

The C.B.C. are making a recording of the proceedings for the purpose of rebroadcasting them over the Dominion Network at 10:30 p.m.

Chapel Notes

Next Sunday coming on a holiday week-end, there will be only one service. This will be held at 11 o'clock in the Chapel, instead of in the Music Room. There will be an opportunity for anyone who so desires to make his Communion also. The Chaplain will give a short address.

The Chapel was officially opened last Sunday with two celebrations of Holy Communion, at 0830 and 1145. Daily services are now held, Monday through Friday, according to the schedule posted just outside the door. In addition to these, there will be additional notices made for Roman Catholic students.

It should be emphasized that the Chapel is non-denominational. It is for the use of the entire student body, Protestant and Roman Catholic alike. It is always open for anyone who may want to use it.

The Padre's office adjoining the Chapel also has an open door for all. Roman Catholic students will note that Father Kyte will be in this office on Thursday nights from seven until eight o'clock.

The Governor General

In conferring the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon the new Governor-General, the University of Toronto is giving honour to Viscount Alexander, not only in his capacity as the King's representative but as one of the leaders of the forces of the United Nations; who through his leadership contributed to the victory which we freedom-loving people are enjoying today.

The end of the war was closely followed by the termination of the term of office of our last Vice-Regal representative. It was therefore fitting that the honour of representing the Crown be given not only to one who had distinguished himself in the conflict, but to one under whose leadership the Canadian fighting men had served.

On this, his first visit to this seat of learning, the University is also expressing its appreciation to the forces by means of the honorary degree which the Senate is conferring upon one of the leaders.

Students at Ajax, who have seen the extent to which the University of Toronto has planned accommodation for returning men and women from the forces, will realize that this appreciation is not meaningless. The University has not only shown its appreciation to the fighting forces through honouring the representative heads of the services, but in the practical way in which it has provided for the rehabilitation and furthering of the education of the rank and file of the men who fought.

When these men applied to the University for admission to the various courses in which they were interested, the university, crowded as it was, rose to the task of accommodating the flood of ex-service men and women. Those of us at Ajax will appreciate the tremendous task and the expense; those now attending the summer courses on the Queen's Park Campus will also appreciate the practical way in which the University is showing its appreciation in provision of the summer course.

The visit of His Excellency will also be an occasion wherein he will have opportunity of meeting a number of those who served under him personally, and of learning in what way they are preparing themselves to take their places as citizens of this country.

Among his many qualities which will appeal to Canadians is his modesty. He has avoided much of the spotlight through his somewhat retiring nature. Other military leaders have taken the spotlight and have become far more colourful.

The result of this is that he has not been as well known as he might have been.

However this should in no way detract from his greatness as a military leader. Indeed those who are in a position to know his accomplishments and his ability must regard him as a soldier of great worth.

During the dark days of Dunkirk and the Japanese occupation of Burma he was assigned to very difficult tasks which he performed not only to his credit but in the face of overwhelming odds and to the amazement of the world.

Canada is indeed honoured by his presence as the representative of His Majesty.

We also welcome him as a citizen of a country who so bravely resisted in the face of overwhelming odds and which has made so many sacrifices in order that peace be possible.

To the man and to the soldier, to his wife and to his family, we extend a warm and hearty welcome, with the wish that their sojourn in our country will be a very happy and a pleasant one.

AJAX LIFE

The following verses are to be chanted to the beat or tune of "That's what I like about the South" in much the same way as Phil Harris does it.

Twenty-four miles from love and lights,
Drudgery days and studying nights,
House party dances and fire hose fights,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Carrots and peas and stew and pard,
Opening an egg and finding it hard,
Not much to eat but bread by the yard,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Dandelions in Residence grass,
Nobody thinking they're gonna pass,
Everyone late for morning class,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Hissing steam and gravel roads,
Big green trucks with human loads,
Frequently skunks but seldom toads,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Three big lines for noon hour dinner,
If you eat here long you're bound to get thinner,
If you show your card you're just a beginner,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Athletic nights with shows and Jacks,
DVA and income tax,
Suntanned arms and sunburned backs,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Softball, horseshoes, borden ball,
Tennis now and rugby next fall,
Ping pong, crap, and closest-to-the-wall,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Roller skating down those corrs,
Sliding on the common room floors,
Bridge players huddled in groups called "Fours",
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Muckin' around in the kitchenette,
Taking a shower and finding it wet,
My roommate's borrowed the soap I'll bet,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Hart House tuck shop, coffee, cokes,
Library, fiction, science, jokes,
Steinway played by musical folks,
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Everyone worrying 'bout Ozark Ike,
Will Sherry Krater sing thro' a mike?
Will the railroad men all go on strike?
An' that's what I like about 'Jax.

Globe and Mail now a nickel a throw,
On a windy day it can really blow,
And when ya gotta go ya gotta go, So long.

Star Of The Unborn

Quite simply and bluntly, Franz Werfel's Star of the Unborn (MacMillan of Canada, $3.25) is a long, dreary and disheartening book. As it happens, I did not read Werfel's Song of Bernadette, and can therefore offer no comparison with this earlier best-seller. But I can still remember how, when I first read it a few years ago, I was deeply impressed by the real intensity and power, as well as by the technically expert writing, in his Forty Days of Musa Dagh. And against the memory of this early novel Star of the Unborn appears as a pretty shoddy piece of work.

It is somewhat difficult to imagine exactly what degeneracy of talent occasioned Werfel's final novel. I suppose that we can assume some direct relationship between its weaknesses and the pull of mass sales and Hollywood contracts. But Werfel's violent and erratic anti-intellectualism contributes a large share to the essential poverty of Star of the Unborn; and here the author's recent religious tendencies come into consideration. I say this without implying an attack on the Roman Catholic Church as such; it is simply that Werfel had apparently developed, with his increasing interest in Catholicism, an attitude fundamentally and completely opposed to rationalism and progressive thought in general. And this attitude happens to be the controlling element in this novel.

Throughout Star of the Unborn are scattered some of the most strikingly biased and unduly simplified intellectual statements I have seen in a long time. For Werfel, "Fascists...were party members who destroyed the old world order by defending it (1). But let's forget this moldy nonsense. After all, the anti-fascists destroyed the new world order by establishing it—which presumably disposes neatly of any hope of ever establishing a worthwhile temporal existence; and that, too, before the disappearance of anti-fascists can reasonably be said to have had any opportunity of demonstrating their abilities. Or again: "do you follow the wild hosts of Saint-Simon, Proudhon, Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, and Vladimir Ilich Lenin..." The list is continued: Darwin, Huxley, Freud, Comte and Spencer and Dewey, Stefan George, and so forth! Werfel's net is broad and all-inclusive, capable of embracing the most deadly enemies just so long as they have made the fundamental error of approving reason.

For the rest, Star of the Unborn is a tired fantasy, a fictionalized travel book of sorts, a projection into a world one hundred thousand years in the future. One F. W. is the protagonist; there is also a horde of lesser characters from the Mental age, which has been purified of all evil but Original Sin (here typified by the existence of the Jungle—a world of flesh and copulation, still with power to draw that weak and wear). The novel is a sprawling affair of over six hun-

A Shot In The Dark

It's a shot in the dark but I believe that a shooting range is one thing that Ajax is missing. The Athletic Office believes that shooting of one kind has overshadowed the real McCoy. I don't believe it so if we are to have a shooting range at Ajax the fight will have to be contested between the student and the Athletic Office. If you want a shooting range show it by writing a few lines to the Sports Editor, The Varsity Office, Hart House.

Mad Dogs And Ajax Men Out In The Mid-Day Sun

And the silvery moon, and the rain and the morning sun. It all says that ten out of fourteen students are contesting in one or more sports. There are twenty-six softball teams, twenty-three tennis teams, seventeen golf, ten borden ball and thirteen horseshoe teams, 18 track and field and four box lacrosse. In other words 71 per cent are actively engaged in intra-mural sports.

Under Course of Construction

The civil Engineers now have the opportunity of a life time.

If one sees at the side of a mud flat next to the courts or north of the cushions, some demented looking things, don't think that the studying is too much for some poor souls. These creatures are Civils looking as the surprising speed that the new tennis courts and rugby field are being set up. The goal posts are now up on the rugby fields and the week of June third is the date set for the first football practice. The new tennis courts will be used for casual play.

Robson To Stefanyshyn

That's it fellows and in other words the title means power to more power. Jack Robson has been replaced by Mike Stefanyshyn as 734 Athletic Representative. According to Mike McAuliffe, our Welland Athlete, "it will take more than beans to stop our teams now."

June Third

That is the date of our next Athletic Night. The Citizens Committee for Troops in Training under Captain Linden are sponsoring the show. The last time this committee sponsored a show here was just before the exams, and that was a good show.

Track and Field Meet Planned

The Athletic Representatives met yesterday afternoon in the Athletic Office to discuss the forthcoming Athletic Night, rules governing tennis courts, date for Track and Field events.

According to Buff Horton, the Athletic Supervisor, no crest designs had been handed him. It was hoped that the design problem for the Architects will show something worthwhile.

Don Bell spoke on behalf of the tennis players, complaining that a game of doubles had to wait until a game of singles were run off. Buff Horton put before the meeting the following proposed rules: (1) That games be limited to one half hour. (2) that a single tournament cede the court to a waiting doubles. (3) that only soft shoes be worn on courts. The Representatives are hoping that the players will co-operate with these rules which are to be posted in each residence.

The Reps. voted that outside talent be brought in for the next Athletic Night on June Third. The members expressed the opinion that it was too late for individual residences to prepare a skit for that night.

The lacrosse, scheduled for this Wednesday is postponed until a week Wednesday so that certain teams can practice a little longer. June 19 is the tentative date for the Track and Field Meet.

South dealer and vulnerable.

Bidding:-		West	North	East
South	1 club	2 clubs
5 clubs

South's bidding may seem a bit overconfident, and he also thinks this when he looks the situation over. Using simple arithmetic he finds that he has one heart loser, two possible diamond losers, and a possible trump loser. This adds up to four possible losing tricks which is two too many for his contract. How to make his contract is his problem.

West leads his heart king, and South sees no future in ducking it, so he takes the first trick with his ace. South now finds himself with the lead in his hand and with the aforementioned, four possible losers.

Our declarer feels that his luck might stretch to a trump split, as he is on good terms with the little yellow dog again. Luck is riding with him this time and the trumps are drawn in two rounds and he again is left with the lead in his hand. His four possible losers are now cut down to three. The diamonds are his biggest difficulty unless he wishes to finesse, but he is a little dubious about his luck lasting.

After a brief pause in which he hoped for a clue from his kibitzers, the dawn breaks and South leads the eight spades to the ace and then returns back to his hand through his king of spades. He now leads the eight of hearts from his hand. His reasoning is quite simple. West must have the queen of hearts to back up his opening lead of the king. Therefore he will most likely cover the ten on the board.

When West takes the lead, South is in solid. South can trump West's lead of hearts, if he does so and slough a diamond from his hand. Likewise with a spade lead. A diamond lead is straight into the gaping jaws of the ace and queen in the declarer's hand. Whatever West leads, South can make his contract.

All this goes to prove that application of common sense, plus a beautiful opportunity for a strip and end play is much better than a blind finesse.

The boys in Residence 734 wish it to be understood that they would appreciate those in other residences who are passing by to go quietly, in order not to disturb them in their studying.

Oh! Frank-i-e!

It is rumoured that Daisy Mae has approached a well known Ajax English professor and asked him to sing the classic "Li'l Abner, Don't Marry Thet Gal" in his next lecture in hope that Li'l Abner, on his way to Lower Slobovia, may hear the song while passing through Ajax.

Jaxers-Hot

The Hot Jaxes again were out in full blast last evening in the Music Room of Hart House. And we do mean full blast.

Residences Gassed

During the late hours of Sunday evening, the residences were attacked by a small striped quadrupede which seemed to be very well 'genned' on the places of hiding. This creature left odours which diffused in the surrounding air and which drifted through the open fenestras and aroused the occupants of the residences. In no time at all the openings were shut and the installed suction fan was thrown into operation in the area but the cut little forest kitten was nowhere to be seen.

This disturbed the residents and a recurrence will warrant calling the "SR" and have the visitor charged under Section "X" of Residence Rules and Section "Z" subsection "Z" paragraph 3 in the "SR's" Bulletin for conduct prejudicial to the good of the school.

Around Town

By Pete Philpott

Where will we go from here? That is a question too often asked by "out of town" Ajaxers. The purpose of this new column is to point out the dancing and entertainment high spots in Toronto.

Casa Loma is our stop over this week. The Castle is situated south of St. Clair on Russell Hill Rd. Here is a place where Engineers having lived among the bees and the flowers for months at Ajax may give vent to their pent up inhibitions and poetry in the soft lighted library where the dance is held. Of course there must be some sort of recompense. Saturday night must bring out plenty of inhibitions and so, is rather crowded. The soft words whispered in dulcet tones is usually punctuated with "ughs" and "umphs" so that the young lady invariably buys you a bottle for gastric acidity. The best system is to whisper sweet nothings.

The dance hall may be crowded but an extremely nice type of person frequents it. Last Saturday, for instance our Annex in Toronto were out in force celebrating the end of examinations. Tickets are sold only to couples and this eliminates stag and stagess lines.

Mr. George Hardy, the manager of the castle, said that it was their aim to cater to the younger set. "The older crowd go for soft music while we try to have peppy tempo."

There are five dance floors where the music may be heard. When you have reduced enough from the constant pummeling you get on the main floor there is the tile balcony which is hard to dance upon with a toeless shoes and is only recommended to those in love and so not feel the water on the tiles oozing between the toes and the cold spring air on bare ear lobes. I should think that this would be a very popular place in summer. The hall on the second floor serves as third ball-room, downstairs there are two extra rooms with tables one in which is used as a dance floor as well. These halls will accommodate a total of twelve hundred guests.

Stan Patton is now playing at the castle, Frank B. Bogart will play next week, Art Hallman follows and Mart Kenny concludes the latter part of June and all August.

See you on the S.S. Cayuga next week.

A lad had emigrated and returned after many years. Asked if he remembered the gas explosion that occurred before he left. Oh, yes, he said, I remember my mother and my father were both sent flying out the door. It was the first time I had seen them going out together.

J. A. Clark Wins Camera Contest

The winning entry in the Camera Contest was submitted by J. A. Clark of Residence 733. The photograph was entitled "Embryo Engineer".

Second place was taken by W. J. Mosley of 724 while honorable mention went to K. H. Sullivan, of 732; M. Macdonald of 730, and W. H. Correll, commuter.

When interviewed Mr. Clark said, "I can sure use the five bucks."

The winning entries will be displayed in the Camera Club building and a full showing by the Camera Club is planned for sometime later in the year.

DANCES AT RESIDENCES

Busloads of girls swarmed the Ajax Campus Friday evening, May 17, as Residences 724, 726 and 733 played hosts to girls from Toronto, Oshawa, Ajax and the Bell Telephone Company in three house dances.

dred pages, with little character development or delineation. The use of F. W. increases the technical difficulties: Werfel's character and ideas so control the book that, while they do give it a certain specious unity, they also destroy the individual validity of everything else.

There are, however, some few excellent narrative sections (for example: the description of the flight of the cats to the less sanctified but more appealing life of the Jungle). Most of the writing is expert, little is inspired; before the end, Werfel himself seems infected with the vast boredom of the whole project. His American publishers state that, before his death, Werfel informed friends that he regarded this as his greatest novel. For his future status as a writer, we may perhaps suggest another verdict; and wish, in fact, that Star of the Unicorn had never been conceived, let alone raised to the comparative maturity of publication.

Hearty Applause Accorded Artists

Last Wednesday evening Hart House Ajax was the scene of a delightful concert presented by Sir Ernest MacMillan and Elie Spivak on the occasion of the formal opening of the beautiful Music Room.

Sir Ernest, Mr. Spivak, Mr. Bickersteth (warden of Hart House Toronto), Mr. Emond, their wives and guests, and the Arts Committee were the guests of Mr. Gillie at a dinner in Arbor Lodge prior to the concert. Mr. Gillie welcomed the artists to Ajax and thanked them for their co-operation in making this opening concert a success.

An estimated 225 persons attended this concert and gave their approval of the artists, the programme and the Music Room. The well-chosen programme consisted of Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in G Minor, Op 39, for Violin and Piano; a group of Violin solos; Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by Cesar Franck; and for an encore the Air on a G String by Bach.

At all times the lowest of the delicate notes could be heard in the farthest corners of the acoustically perfect room. Sometimes a room that has no reverberance such as this Music Room, is inclined to have an oppressive atmosphere making it difficult for an artist to perform. However both Sir Ernest and Mr. Spivak assured the Arts Committee that this was not the case, Mr. Spivak stating that "it is an easy room to play in". The general atmosphere in the room was very pleasant, more like that in a home than at a recital.

Sir Ernest had a particularly pleasant manner with a disarming smile that won the admiration of all. His playing was characterized by a verve and enthusiasm that had not been seen before that here was a real artist capable of producing the finest of tone pictures and of playing the most intricate and difficult passages with a confidence known only to the true artist.

Elie Spivak, a quiet, retiring gentleman, is a real master of the violin. His renditions were accurate and beautiful. His skill was displayed during the zesty Allegros, the beautiful Nocturne, the enchanting Tambourin Chinois, and the difficult staccato in the Andagio Cantabile of the Sonata No. 7. The finale of this Sonata is a powerful movement embodying a delightful bit of repartee between piano and violin with the necessary heavier passages to balance.

The perfectly played Cesar Franck Sonata was a very good choice for this programme with its infectious dynamic first movement and lovely melodious third movement. Amongst the violin solos were Kreisler's Praeludium and Allegro (not quite as well received as his Tambourin Chinois) and the familiar Nocturne in E flat—Chopin-Sarasate.

The encore, Bach's Air on a G String, is beautiful and it is amazing that such an enjoyable selection can be played entirely on one string.

The terrific effort put forth by these two great artists was clearly visible to those close to them for they were obviously fatigued by the exertion and they are to be highly commended for their willingness to give time and effort. It was gratifying to see that so many students availed themselves of this opportunity to see really good music presented by two of the country's greatest artists. An appreciative "hush" fell over the audience from the moment the programme started to the end of the encore, broken only by the whole-hearted applause of an approving audience at the conclusion of each selection. The distant rumble of a speeding train was the only extraneous noise.

After the programme Sir Ernest gave the Varsity an exclusive interview. Asked for a general statement on Ajax as a whole (he toured the academic area after the dinner) he stated that he thought "The project is an eye-opener". He wished that he could have seen the buildings before they were converted in order that he might more fully appreciate the change, but he could see from the visit that wonders had been worked. Commenting on the Music Room he said "A comfortable room to play in...no reverberance...harmonious atmosphere..." Mr. Spivak stated that he thought that the breadth of the room was one of the major advantages.

Sir Ernest was very impressed by the collection of records for the Record Room and expressed a desire to hear the record player in operation. They key to the record room and an album were produced and he listened approvingly to records. Both artists agreed that Ajax students were more fortunate than the Toronto students, having this machine capable of reproducing records with such fidelity.

Then, retiring to the Library, Sir Ernest and Mr. Spivak were served with refreshments along with the other special guests of the Arts Committee.

The next concert in what will become a regular series will be presented in the Music Room by the Arts Committee at an early date. Watch Bulletin Board for announcements.

the United Kingdom and under Alexander's command in India.

Last Friday, he was one of the three servicemen from Ajax presented to their Excellencies.

During the dinner at Hart House he was seen through clouds of dense cigar smoke, which issued from his mouth.

Europe Starves And Ajax Stuffs

Canadians are asked to save bread and wheat products in order to feed Europe. In Britain, inspectors are searching garbage cans for wasted bread. The cafeteria staff, aware of these facts, were alarmed at the one or two slices of bread that they found on many plates. Last Tuesday, after one meal, they collected and weighed this wasted bread. The full and half slices (the crusts weren't included) were equal to 15 of the large, one and a half pound, cafeteria loaves.

"This amounts to 45 loaves a day," commented Mrs. McLeod of the Cafeteria staff. "It is our policy to allow the boys all the bread they want, but we feel that, in view of the facts, they might try to judge their appetites better in the future."

Viscount Alexander Feted By University

Last Thursday His Excellency Viscount Alexander and his attractive wife Viscountess Margaret, were guests of the University of Toronto.

Arriving at Hart House, their Excellencies were met by the Chancellor, Dr. Cody, the President of the University, Dr. Sidney Smith and the chairman of the Board of Governors, Col. W. E. Phillips.

Among the highlights of the day was the presentation to their Excellencies of ten ex-servicemen who had seen service in Italy and North Africa. Three of these ten were from Ajax and consisted of R. A. McClenahan, J. J. Brigham, and Ted Hodgson, as well as seven others from the various courses in Arts given on the Toronto Campus.

Luncheon

Their Excellencies sat down to luncheon in the Great Hall of Hart House at which fifty servicemen and women were guests of honour. The Great Hall was filled with representatives of the student body, faculty members, and representatives of the provincial government and city council.

At the close of the luncheon President Smith called upon Dr. Cody to propose a toast to His Excellency. In a few words the President outlined the part played by the University of Toronto in World War II, stating that 11,000 of the University men and women had enlisted in the various branches of the services.

Dr. Cody welcomed the Governor-General and his wife. He recalled that nine years before Their Majesties the King and Queen had occupied the same places at the table.

Thanks Toronto University. In his reply to the toast His Excellency thanked the City of Toronto and the University for the warm and hearty welcome he and his wife had received stating that he would reserve most of his remarks for later in the afternoon. He mentioned that there was near Toronto, a township named Caledon which he liked to think of as being settled by settlers from his home county in Ireland.

Governments Represented

Premier George Drew and Mayor R. Saunders were present with their wives. Premier Drew representing the Province of Ontario while Mayor Saunders represented the City of Toronto.

Convocation Held

Amid a large crowd consisting of University dignitaries, members of the faculty, ex-service students, uniform and other students in civics as well as representatives of the provincial and civic governing bodies, Field Marshal Viscount Alexander received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University.

By 3:30 p.m. the large circular auditorium and its ample galleries were crowded with visitors who had come to see and to hear Canada's new Governor General. The rear galleries had been reserved for the 52 guests at the luncheon earlier in the day. These were selected from the students enrolled at Ajax and in the summer courses held in the various colleges of Queen's Park. They had all seen service overseas and many of them had formerly served in Italy and North Africa.

Dr. Healy Willan, Principal of the Conservatory presided at the organ and gave a short recital before the Convocation. Dr. W. T. Brown, President and Vice-Chancellor of Victoria University read the opening prayer, President Sidney Smith offered greeting to their Excellencies and wished them happiness in their new homeland and Godspeed in His Excellency's high office. He stated that it was not because of his position of representative of the Crown that they were honouring him but

Ajax life is not all Statics and Engineering Drawing. Finitum est Cum Laudis

The Varsity has been used for many things in the past years. This year it played Cupid with the hearts of Peggy Bates and Johnny Rook.

Peggy Bates was women's editor of the paper last year while Mr. Rook performed the duties of makeup and rewrite editor. "It was those midnight snacks that did it," stated the happy couple. Just what those snacks did do, this reporter does not know, presumably watered the bloom of romance.

The Bates-Rook wedding took place last Saturday afternoon in Hart House Chapel with only relatives and close friends present. At the reception though, held at the home of Dr. Bates, The Varsity staff appeared in full force. In the greenhouse sat the punch-bowl and also in the greenhouse stood The Varsity staff guarding it. Some guests tried to edge into the sacred place now and then but always without success unless they brought sandwiches or cake.

Officials at the wedding were Dr. Bates who gave his daughter away, Betty Bates the maid of honor, and Hortense Wasteneys the bridesmaid. Both of these girls were dressed in blue suits with flowers in their hair. Creighton Mitchell was the best man and Tete Fisher the usher, both wore diamond socks. The new Mrs. Rook wore a

Engineers' Work Subject of Talks

The Ajax Engineering Society has arranged to have a number of prominent engineers from the various engineering fields to visit Ajax for the purpose of giving talks to the students along semi-technical lines. These talks are for the purpose of giving the students an idea of the type of work connected with the various branches of engineering, so that students may choose their particular field wisely. These are to be talks rather than lectures and students will be given an opportunity to ask questions which may arise in their minds.

The meetings will be held in the music room of Hart House.

The first meeting will be held at Thursday evenings at 8:00 p.m. and the speaker is Dean C. R. Young.

Dean Young is one of the country's foremost engineers. In addition to his position of Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science, Dr. Young is also a consulting engineer of renown and has been consulted during the planning of most of the large engineering projects throughout the country. Dr. Young will speak to the students not as a lecturer but as one who is well acquainted with the various fields of engineering in which they may be interested.

The Engineering Society has been fortunate in securing the services of these men and it is hoped that the students will avail themselves of the opportunity to discuss their plans with those who "have the gen".

News Editor of The Varsity Stricken With Appendicitis

Shortly after returning to Ajax after the week-end in Toronto, Joe Brigham, 734, Mechanical Engineering, and News Editor of The Varsity was stricken with appendicitis.

Following an examination at the local hospital he was rushed by ambulance to Christie Street Hospital, Toronto, where an appendectomy was performed last night.

At the time of going to press it was learned that the patient was doing fine.

During the war Joe served as a radar mechanic in the R.C.A.F. in Active Enjoyment

Last Wednesday evening, Ajax music lovers were given a rare treat. It was the recital given by Sir Ernest MacMillan and Mr. Elie Spivak on the occasion of the formal opening of the Music Room in Hart House.

In view of the fact that Sir Ernest is now confining his musical activities chiefly to conducting rather than performing, it was indeed an unusual privilege to enjoy hearing him play.

The tremendous ovation given to the artists by the large audience, composed for the most part of students, shows that contrary to what the artsmen may think, engineers do possess a great deal of culture and are appreciative of the finer things of life.

That those who planned Hart House Ajax, realized this, is shown by the fact that a great deal of expense was taken to provide for cultural development of Skulemen. Subsequent activities have continued the policy of providing the same opportunities for cultural development that exist in the city of Toronto. The Hart House Glee Club and the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra have visited Ajax. Numerous art exhibits also have been procured and Skulemen are truly appreciative.

Nevertheless, one must eliminate passivity in order to derive the greatest benefit. He should possess an active state of mind and be prepared to participate in events, by which means he will tend to improve his own knowledge or skills. One learns by doing even in the appreciation of art and music.

One of the most deplorable manifestations of this age of science is that while the magnificent stadia and arenas built for sports events are filled by thousands, only a relatively few participate. Are we justified in calling ourselves a sport loving people when we enjoy sports merely from a spectator's point of view?

The old backyard ball field was far more conducive to developing a nation of sportsmen. A far greater number participated and benefited.

Here at Ajax many organizations and much equipment have been provided for our use. For sports we have ball diamonds, tennis courts and bowling alleys. In Hart House we have a Glee Club, Sketch Club, Camera Club and Hobby Club.

The Athletic Directorate has planned inter-residence sports events so that the greatest possible number of students may actively participate. This has met with a great deal of success.

The Hart House Committee also has organized groups interested in more aesthetic forms of recreation. Their efforts have met with a more limited degree of success.

That there are a large number of music lovers in the student body is shown by the success of the recital. What could be a better opportunity for them to pursue their interests than by joining the Glee Club group? Group singing is a form of musical participation, which requires relatively little training, and no effort apart from turning out to the practices.

The Glee Club hopes to be able to put on programs for the entertainment of the student body, but in order to do this it requires support. It will also provide musical training and enjoyment for those who wish it.

It is a real opportunity for Ajax Skulemen. J.F.F.

Art, Music and Drama

The Promenade:

A week ago tonight the Toronto Philharmonic Orch. presented its third Prom under the guest direction of Percy Grainger, distinguished composer and pianist. The first part of the programme was, as usual, difficult to hear due to the noise of late-comers who continued to arrive in force until the end of the second selection. Something should be done about these extraneous extra-mural distractions that weekly persist in disturbing the audience for the first half hour of each Prom.

The programme consisted of the "Britannia" Overture by Montreal's Violet Archer; "English Gothic Music" orchestrated by Percy Grainger, Gardiner's "Shepherd Fennel's Dance"; "Ballade for Viola and Orchestra" by Toronto's Godfrey Ridout; Percy Grainger at the piano playing his own "Youthful Suite"; "Warsaw Concerto" by Addinsell; Morton Gould's "American Concertette" and as encores his transcription of Gershwin's "Love Walked In"; "Nola"; and his own "Country Garden."

The concert was unique by virtue of the fact that three

by Inspid

Instep I. M. Inspid was feeling contented. In fact, as he rested on the edge of the bed letting the chicken bones digest, he felt that he would actually be happy, if and only if—

"A fourth for bridge wanted." The call bounced off the corridor walls, ricocheted in through the transom and struck Instep heavily on the forehead. The owner of that pony voice (a little horse, that is) was going to get his fourth. No Longer would I.M.I. have to say if and only if he could play bridge. The great moment had come. He would soon be one of the boys.

Two packs of cards were placed on the table. Three earnest engineers plus Instep sat waiting. "Cut for deal and partners."—No shrieks filled the air, no groans nor screams. Engineers are stoic characters. But there was the evidence. Three forefingers, three thumbs, and a pack of cards neatly bisected, plus the fact that Instep still held his coveted commando knife—these were the result of Inspid's cut for deal.

Being forgiving characters as well, the mess was scraped off the table to join the knee high pile of cigarette butts on the floor, and Inspid was given the deal. Amazingly enough, after going round and round the table giving everybody a card, he ended up taking the last card himself. There was no trouble in sorting the cards out. Inspid was clever. He arranged his cards according to colours. The only suit whose name he was sure of was hearts. He had the two of hearts in his hand. After opening with two hearts, the grinning engineer across from him bid three no-trump.

As usual there was a girl on Inspid's conscience. He pictured her lovely hands with such symmetrical wrinkles. Those beautiful nails again flashed through his mind. Someday he might slip a ring over one of those two inch spikes, and perhaps even pry it past the second knuckle.

"Oh, so sorry, is it my bid? I shall say five diamonds." His brain was functioning now. A bid of seven no-trump by his partner registered with a familiar clang. The double on his right meant fourteen no-trump. His partners redoubt could only mean twenty-eight no-trump. After considerable thought, Inspid decided to pass lest he overbid his hand.

"Your hand goes down Instep." Obedient always, Instep placed a hairy paw on the table. "No! No! Put your cards down." Much confusion followed. Instep's cards were down. His partner's jaw was moving back and forth, his nostrils were expanding to enormous size and contracting, so that when he breathed a sound like a combination muffled train whistle and a wolf howl was forced out of him. His eyes became large and glossy. That big question mark kept hooking itself on his neck. Even after setting a new four minute mile record in his race to get a Wye level from the stores, he still could not see any more than a singleton heart in the dummy hand. Perhaps there was parallax someplace?

The engineer to the right of Instep had doubled on his king, queen, jack, and ten of diamonds. Little did he know that the dummy hand would contain nine spades to the queen, three little clubs, and the two of hearts. The diamond king lead was overtaken with the ace. Three club tricks were taken by the bidder and having the other four spades in his hand, he laid the rest of the cards down.

While the hand was being played, Instep was standing in the far corner of the room with a waste-paper basket on his head. His comrades had told him that he was dummy, and that he couldn't take part for that hand. Melancholy was written all over his face. He didn't mind that so much because he could easily wash it off some morning next week when he wasn't in such a rush for breakfast. What hurt him most was the waste-paper basket. Since Kindergarten, he had always been the dummy of the class. When his classmates of six used to run out at recess and play pool, thirteen year old "dummy" Instep would stand in the corner with a waste-paper basket on his head and recite over and over again, W-O-L-F.

OUR READERS WRITE...

Dear Mr. Editor,

There are no bad words. To assure you that this is not a typographical error I repeat, there are no bad words but simply bad ways to use words.

A recent complaint about the bad language used by students on the Ajax campus led to some comments among the students and others. I chanced to hear a small fragment of a wash-room conversation of which I remember these words: "I told him I said, 'Jesus Christ'." Evidently the speaker was defending himself from a rebuke for using bad language, and he did not consider these words that he used, to be bad. His opinion seemed to be rather widely held, and it is about this opinion that I write.

When we budding engineers were little boys our mothers told us that certain words were naughty words and we must not say them. That was sufficient for the childish mind, especially in view of the fact that mother's hand wielded the hair brush, or something. But as we grew older and spent more time out of mother's sight and hearing, especially hearing, we adopted the bad language that was current in certain circles, and it became a habit. That is all that it is. It has no meaning that could not be conveyed by the accent without the words. I know what a man means when he utters profanity in words of any language, and I am not a linguist. Now that we have grown out of the fear of the hair brush, or something, we should develop some grown-up ideas about this bad language that mother tried to teach us to avoid.

Mother was trying to teach us to keep within certain bounds set by the customs of our society. Behind those customs were reasons, some of them no longer valid, about which perhaps even mother did not know. But even if the reason behind the ban on a certain expression is no longer valid we should not carelessly violate good taste.

All bad language comes as a shock to persons of gentle breeding, and therefore courtesy demands that we avoid it in their presence. Most men agree that we should avoid it in the presence of women but I do not support the double standard. There are some men in whose presence we should avoid bad language, and they are not all parsons either.

Some bad language must be classed as blasphemy. That is a word that is almost unknown in some of our churches, especially mine, but its significance should not be overlooked. Blasphemy is the using of the name of God irreverently as in uttering abuse. It is a sin, being forbidden by God. The reason is quite obvious. Any word used in profanity comes to be considered a bad word. It calls forth evil associations. It jolts the hearer and drives away reverence. If you are an atheist this means nothing to you, but if you are an atheist why are you using the name of God anyway?

Bad words are bad only by association. Consider what has happened to the name of that innocent little animal, the ass. Yet put its name in a good sentence and no one can take exception to it. Let us stop making words bad, and cultivate one language that we can use in any company. It is a waste of effort to learn an indecent language for use in indecent company.

spells—and so on until the bell rang.

The waste-paper basket habit became so bad that he had a half inch groove worn away around the circumference of his head. When the light shone a certain way, he proved very attractive to the girls, for the reflection from his bald

A Fragment Of Hope

Andre Malraux wrote Man's Hope some years ago; and it is a novel about the Spanish Civil War, which after the turmoil of the past eight years, seems sometimes to be as far removed from immediate problems as the Middle Ages. But there are good and sufficient reasons for recalling Man's Hope at this time: the complex Spanish problem, which was never completely or even partly solved by Franco's victory, now appears likely to meet an early and possibly violent resolution; moreover, this novel remains one of the most ambitious works of a writer who can correctly be termed one of the few important novelists of our time.

Man's Hope is about the Spanish Republican armies and civilians, with their opponents being introduced only indirectly and almost incidentally. Malraux makes no effort to be non-partisan, and it might be well to affirm immediately that no such neutral state is required of the novelist; in fact, it could only lead in many cases, of which I consider this to be one, to utter impotency. But in a larger

Unclutched

Yes, the myth that Ajax doesn't want a rifle range is shot. Up to date eleven letters to the editor have been received at The Varsity Office. The Rifle Range in Toronto is sponsored by Hart House, if the Athletic Association at Ajax will not back a Rifle Club the Hart House Committee will take the matter up. Buff Horton, the Athletic Supervisor, said that if they could fit shooting into their overcrowded program the Athletic Association would back a rifle club.

That's what Captain Lynden of The Citizens Committee for Troops in Training said about the forthcoming Athletic Night on June third. The final Athletic Night will be held July fourth and Captain Lynden has guaranteed that Ajax will have the best show possible. For this show every effort is being made to get all or part of the "Stop and Go" show which is making a current hit in Toronto. Incidentally there is an up and coming young lady in this show who directs the orchestra, composed many of the pieces and wrote some of the acts. It will be well worth coming just to see Dorothy Bromby. (I hope she comes). At the final Athletic Night on July fourth The Gilley Trophy, The Dean Young Pennant and the Sydney Earl Smith Cup will be presented to the winning teams.

Thank

Speaking for the athletes at Ajax, I would like to tender our thanks to Mr. Shortread, Mr. Bill Windrum and Mr. Tom "Sandy" McGee for their fine efforts in making the outdoor sports facilities a success. These men are in charge of construction and with a limited amount of help these men have done admirably by adding new outdoor sports equipment to the Ajax Campus.

Knighthood

We are not saying that knighthood is coming to Ajax but we are going to get shields. In less than a week (I hope) the Architects will be designing an Athletic Shield. These shields will be awarded to members of the winning intramural teams.

Inter-Resident Golf Tourney

Last night the Athletic representatives held a meeting in the Athletic Office to discuss the golf tournament, the system of awarding the Dean Young Pennant and design for Athletic Crests.

The Oshawa Golf have invited the golf teams at Ajax to play their opening and closing games on their course, Buff Horton stated. Buff went on to say that the respective House Reps. should emphasize the point that novices to the game would not be appreciated on the green. The Oshawa Golf and Country Club according to those who have played their course is the very finest and according to the Athletic Supervisor there will in all probability be just one game because of the already over crowded program. Athletic Representatives will post in the near future application sheets for team play.

After not much debate, Doug Andrews proposed the motion that for the month of May the Dean Young Pennant be presented to the residence whose top four teams competing in three or more sports has the most points.

The following changes in the sports schedule were announced; In the softball schedule for Wednesday, diamond four, 7:15 p.m. should read 732A vs 723A. For horse shoes on the same day should read 725 vs 734.

The Architects will have as their next Days Design "Sports Crests" according to Buff Horton. The Reps will offer a five dollar prize for the best entry.

Prize Money Goes To Queen's Editor

Kenneth G. Phin, of Whitby, who has just completed his third year in medicine at Queen's has been awarded the first prize of $1,000 in a contest held by the Montreal Standard. He is the son of Mr. H. P. and the late Mrs. Phin of Whitby.

For two years he was editor of the Queen's Journal, the undergraduate paper, and served as secretary of the Canadian University Press.

His essay was on the subject, "How Should We Build a World Government In The Atomic Age?" and was contested by students from every province in Canada.

of the composers—Violet Archer, Godfrey Ridout and, of course, Percy Grainger—er — were present taking bows at the conclusion of their respective works. Mrs. Archer's "Britannia" described in the programme notes as a "joyful overture" is built on a theme of "Rule Britannia" and two French Canadian folk songs—just the merest suggestive phrases of each being present in frustrating touches. It is not as mature a work as could be hoped for and was not as enthusiastically received as Godfrey Ridout's lovely Ballade for Viola and Orchestra beautifully rendered by red-headed youthful Stanley Solomon whose sympathetic touch showed him to be an accomplished violist. This is borne out by the fact that he is first violist of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, has played with the Columbia and Baltimore Symphony Orchestras as first and assistant first viola respectively, and gained musical distinction while overseas with the R.C.A.F.

The orchestra as a whole seemed to take the first two selections to "warm-up" and did not appear as well rehearsed in these selections as in later ones. As usual the fiddles were very good, the woodwinds not too bad, the brass lacked something (it wasn't power), the percussion was good and the flautists excellent, particularly in the "Youthful Suite."

Percy Grainger, as a conductor, is different to say the least. Featured by his special extra-large scores in colour his appearance was marked by such unorthodox occurrences as his visits to the orchestra long before the programme began (to check on the musical scores, etc.) his loud and clear voice announcing the Gothic music and his encores, the way he put the piano light on the floor so he could see better, etc., etc.

But he certainly had good control over the orchestra paying particular attention to each section as and when required. He didn't seem to get as good results as did Fritz Mahler probably partly due to the fact that some of the music was new to him, for example the Britannia Overture.

During those selections that Mr. Grainger was at the keyboard the orchestra was conducted by Paul Scherman, a young local man who seems to get very good response from the orchestra and who should have more opportunities to conduct at the Prom. He gave a sympathetic reading to the beautiful "Warsaw Concerto" and got good results when conducting the "American Concertette" considering the type of work that this selection is. It gives the impression of being "disconnected."

Percy Grainger as a pianist is unsurpassable. He was superb playing the "Warsaw Concerto," excelled in the "American Concertette," was recalled by loudly acclaiming audience. His three encores were extremely good and particularly well chosen. A burst of Ohhhs and Ahhhs swept through the audience when they heard that he would play his own "Country Garden" as an encore.

It is indeed fortunate that such men as Dom Anselm Hughes, O.S.B., Arnold Dokmetsch, and Percy Aldridge Grainger have the ability to transcribe such musical masterpieces as the Old English Gothic Music for modern orchestra, because, without their efforts much of this beautiful music would be lost to the world. This old music was scored in such a way that it requires no small amount of study to even read it. The English Gothic music is really beautiful but it was just a little on the quiet side for the first part of the Prom when people are still arriving. "Shepherd Fennel's Dance" is a delightful dance interspersed with contrastingly quiet parts possibly picturing the feelings of the Shepherd's wife as she sees the guests' appetites increasing and her food reserves decreasing. Grainger's "Youthful Suite" is gay and lilting and with Leo Barkin at the piano the audience was captivated by the typical charm of this suite so like the "individual" personality of this composer.

Tonight the Prom will present Donald Dame, popular tenor singing "Il mio tesoro" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," "Yours Is My Heart Alone" by Lehár, "Le Reve" from Massenet's "Manon," Peter Warlocks "Good Ale" and "Darling, Tell Me You Love Me Tonight" as arranged by Lieberfeld. Orchestral selections will include "Der Freischütz" overture by Weber, an extract from Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel," Haydn's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Triana by Albeniz and Polvetzian Dances from "Prince Igor" by Berodin.

Book Review

sense the novel can be considered above partisanship: it simply represents another of Malraux's attempts to discover, in the midst of social and political chaos, some key to the fundamental nature and problems of man. I find it difficult to imagine how, in Franco's fascist armies, with their dedication of man's individuality to authority and extinction, any novelist could be expected to discover much of the true nature of rational man.

As a novel of this type, Man's Hope is far less successful than the same author's earlier Man's Fate, which had as its background the Chinese Civil War of the late twenties. Its greater scope seems to have contributed in part to this failure: there are simply too many people, too many organizations and political theories to be considered. The book remains peculiarly fragmentary, in spite of the numerous external coincidences which are utilized to link the characters together. When this later novel is pared to Man's Fate, another reason for the failure appears logically possible: the men of the Republican Army are never shown in contact with women, and one crucial phase of their tragedy remains unconsidered.

Although political differences among the government forces are thoroughly discussed, Man's Hope can only be considered in many ways a surprisingly naive political work. We, of course, have the advantage now, for we know just how deep was the division between the communists, on one side, and the anarchists and radical socialists. It does appear, however, that Malraux, one of the great political novelists of any period, brought a curiously blind idealism with him to Spain.

In spite of flaws, Man's Hope constitutes a major work. And when I called the review a fragment of hope, I had a special purpose in mind. For the strange dignity of the Spanish struggle for freedom still remains as one of the few small hopes of our time. And the efforts of novelists like Malraux to understand man's fundamental dignity, to find an ethical basis for the novel, to write of man as rational rather than simply bestial—these too remain a hope, which may some day be more than merely fragmentary.

Tobacco Work Gen Presented

For the benefit of students who are interested in helping with the tobacco harvest the S.A.C. has submitted the following letter received from the Unemployment Insurance Commission:

Unemployment Insurance Commission,
174 Spadina Avenue,
Toronto 2B, Ontario.
May 27th, 1946.

Mr. R. H. Irwin,
Students' Administrative Council,
University of Toronto, Ajax Division,
Hart House,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of 17th May addressed to the Department of Agriculture has been forwarded to me.

There will be a demand for workers in the flue-cured tobacco area from about the middle of July until about the middle of September.

The strongest demand is for experienced workers but a considerable number of inexperienced workers are absorbed at lower wages than those paid to experienced men. It is probable that a larger number of workers will go to that area than in the past, as the reports on high wages get wide circulation and often some embroidery during that process.

Wages varied from $6.-$8.00 in the past. In rare instances, higher wages are paid during a short period when unfavorable weather conditions or a temporary shortage of labour increases the urgency of the situation.

The area in which flue tobacco is grown is centered around Norfolk County and the most active points of employment are Simcoe, Delhi and Tillsonburg, at which we have Employment Offices which serve both growers and workers. At the same time a good deal of hiring is done in the villages without reference to Employment Offices at all.

The work is arduous, demands some physical stamina and is dirty, and often the conditions of living are not very attractive. During the season the influx of a very large number of workers into the towns mentioned, taxes accommodation far beyond its capacity and many men are compelled to sleep out-of-doors until they obtain employment.

I believe these conditions should be made known to any of your students who are interested in obtaining work in the tobacco fields. I would also point out that weather and crop conditions tend to interfere with regular employment and it is doubtful if, on the average, twenty days' employment are found during the month by the average worker.

Another thing that should be understood is that until the harvest is ready, there is no demand for workers and I would strongly advise that no one go into the area until they have first ascertained that harvest operations are in full swing. During the two weeks previous to harvest a large number of workers migrate into the area, there is no work for them, and as already indicated, the accommodation is extremely difficult to obtain. That period would be a dead loss. Information as to the progress of harvest can be obtained from the Employment Offices at the points already mentioned or from the Agricultural Representatives at Simcoe, Woodstock and St. Thomas.

I would suggest that any of your students who are interested in this work would make good contacts by applying to our Employment Offices and would, at the same time, offer the caution that unless a man is prepared to undergo muscular discomfort until he becomes accustomed to the work to be performed, he would be well advised not to entertain the idea of working in the tobacco harvest. At the same time, I believe there will be a brisk demand for men who are able to perform the work satisfactorily.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) W. DAVISON,
Agricultural Advisor.

Nuclear Energy Topic of Paper

Physicists from all over Canada, Ajax included, are attending what should prove to be a very interesting convention at the McClellan Laboratory, University of Toronto.

"Gen" of a hitherto secret nature on atomic energy, may be disclosed during the three-day session which began yesterday.

Professor J. D. Cockcroft of Cambridge University, England, who had succeeded in splitting the atom even before the cyclotron, has prepared a paper which was read yesterday morning.

A public meeting in Convocation Hall on Saturday evening will mark the close of the convention.

Lectures in physics at Ajax have been cancelled in order that the students in Engineering Physics may have the opportunity to attend. Transportation by bus to Toronto has also been arranged for those wishing to attend.

S.A.C. NOTES

JOBS

There are now a few part-time jobs available for students. Anyone interested apply to the SAC Office as soon as possible.

Hart House Dance Becoming Sellout

Two hundred and thirty of three hundred tickets for the Hart House Summer Dance have been sold. Arrangements have been made to provide transportation for those who do not live in Toronto.

Up to Friday night 120 dance tickets have been sold in the Engineering Stores and 110 at the Tuck Shop. This leaves only seventy of the quota of three hundred tickets still available. The price is two dollars a couple.

The dance is sponsored by the house committee of Hart House Ajax and will be held in Hart House Toronto on Friday June the fourteenth. It will probably be the last university affair of the term as the final examinations will be only six weeks away. Hart House Toronto was chosen for the dance because it will not be as far for most students to bring their dates, and because it will give some their first opportunity to see this famous building. Hart House Toronto, is an ideal location for a Summer dance.

Ellis McLintock, one of Toronto's top flight bands, will play in the main gym. He drew a crowd of ten thousand when he played for the Teen Town Dance in Maple Leaf Gardens, and he broadcasts over the CBC National Network every Saturday.

Spoke Last Night

DEAN C. R. YOUNG of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, who is also a practising engineer, spoke to students last evening about the various types of work connected with engineering.

Head Of Ajax Speaks To Students Of S.P.S.

Various Fields Of Engineering

Last night Dean C. R. Young spoke to small group of engineering students in the music room on the "Engineering Professions" and explained the type of work each has to do. A larger audience was expected but those who were there enjoyed the special talk very much as their applause indicated. As usual The Dean was very interesting and he cleared up many points that were bothering some of the students regarding certain aspects of professional engineering.

Club Engineering
In opening his address The Dean spoke on Civil Engineering, the profession in which he was trained, and he told of the widely diversified field covered by this profession. This profession grew out of military engineering and one might say it is the father of all engineering. Work of this kind gives fundamental training in many fields and it is possible for a civil engineers to move in on the fields of mechanical, mining, or even electrical engineers. In the days when Canada was opening up, this type of engineering took first place as railways, canals, and roads pushed the frontiers farther and farther west.

He is a firm believer in the fact that a young graduate engineer should move about from place to place and get as much diversified experience as he can before he settles down to one position. A student in this work should be proficient in mathematics, analytic problem solving and design. The types of construction include canal, dam, power installations and many other works.

Mining, The Outdoor Man
And now the Mining profession can be discussed. A mining engineer must be content to live an outdoor life and he must live it in the aboriginal of city life although he may live near a large town like Kirkland Lake. In his early work a man in this profession finds it necessary to work underground in order to know what goes on down there but later on he will find it necessary only to go below the surface to see how the work progresses. He may work as a mill or a under-ground superintendent, as a mine construction man, and he may work in the assay office.

The amount of mathematics required in this work is very small as is the theoretical application of the work. Material and experimental aspects of the job are more of interest to him. He learns by experience for the most part. An Ontario Government scheme in operation at present moves fellows interested in the mining business from place to place in order that they may learn the work thoroughly.

Mechanical Engineer
The Mechanical Engineer is interested in design, production, and improvement of present equipment. He must be very "well up" in his mathematics and design work. The man who takes this kind of work as his profession must be interested in the supervision of production, in human nature, and he must be able to handle men. This latter aspect of the position is becoming more and more important. We appreciate this fact when we see the number of industrial strikes there are. The problems of readjustment become more important than the technical work.

The Artist Engineer
The next profession is Architecture. An Architect must be a combination of artist and engineer, he must blend colours to a pleasing relationship, he must design with an eye to beauty as well as sound building construction. This profession is closely related to the season. Rainy seasons in the tropics, our own winter and the equatorial heat all make building nearly impossible. Unlike the other Engineering professions, the Architect applies his knowledge at all times, he is essentially an artist and not likely to swing into the Engineering Physics.

The graduate of Engineering Physics can adapt himself readily in Field, Government and Private research. He is highly trained in science and mathematics. The graduate is also substantially trained in Engineering. Engineering Physics combines the product of Arts and Engineering. This quality is appreciated in graduates by such large firms as International Nickel, Ontario Research, National Research Council, and The Aluminum Corporation of Canada. These men pursue problems requiring mathematics and science and like the Architect is an artist in his own right and not likely to take up managerial work. The last war employed many of these specialized engineers in such work as radar.

Metallurgist
Metallurgical Engineering Profession is divided into two sections, Metallurgical and Ceramics. The Metallurgical Engineer is interested in extracting, refining and alloying of metals. The Ceramic Engineer is mainly occupied with clay and non-metallic minerals. He works on bricks, glass, furnace refractories, porcelain and helps the Electrical Engineer by producing insulators.

Mining Geologist
Walking hand in hand with the Metallurgical and the Mining Engineers is the graduate of Mining Geology. It is the job of this engineer to predict the position of a vein of ore, to estimate the value of the vein and to advise the Mining Engineer where operations should begin. His work is mainly outdoor and for this type of engineering the student should have a very robust build. Important in this field is a good understanding of chemistry, mineralogy, and some idea of the work of the mining and metallurgical engineers.

Aeronautical Engineer
One of the latest courses added to the curriculum is that of Aeronautical Engineering. It was thought advisable to break the options of civil and mechanical engineering in this subject up and from a separate course. This course is one in which mathematics and physics are studied in a rigorous way. The course at this university does more than fit a student to work on aircraft production, it fits him on design as well. Many American universities give a course which lacks much of the scientific and mathematical work so very necessary in aircraft design.

Engineering and Business
Another new course is that of Engineering and Business which gives a student who is not particularly interested in the technical and scientific aspects of engineering. This work prepares a man for managerial and sales work. His course consists of 71% scientific subjects and 29% business administration. The latter includes 6% cultural arts. It was found in a recent survey that 50% of Engineers end up in some business capacity, and for this reason it was deemed advisable to have such a course. The fact that 71% of the work is Engineering is given so that the student is eligible under the Professional Engineers Association to practice as an Engineer.

This is the beginning of a number of talks to be given by prominent engineers. They are of a semi-technical nature and should be of interest to those who wish a better idea of the nature of the work in which they will be engaged.

S.P.S. Staff Head Societies

At the Annual Meeting of the Affiliated Engineering and Allied Societies in Ontario, Professor E. A. Allcut, head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, University of Toronto, was elected president for the ensuing twelve months. This election completes a remarkable cycle; four members of the teaching staff of the Department of Mechanical Engineering are officials of important engineering organizations. Dr. G. R. Lord, Associate Professor of Mechanical Engineering, is president of the Association of Professional Engineers. Professor R. C. Wren, Associate Professor in the same department, is chairman of the Ontario Section of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers while a fourth member of the teaching staff, Professor I. W. Smith, is Honorary Chairman of the Students' Section of the Toronto Division of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. To add to this round of official connection with Engineering comes the announcement today that at the annual conference of the Student Branches of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers held recently at Sunbury, Pa., the first prize for presentation of a student thesis was won by R. A. SINGER, a member of this year's graduating class in Mechanical Engineering at the University of Toronto.

Facts 'N' Figures

A study of the examination results for the first year at Queen's Park as published in Wednesday's paper provides interesting reading, for those at Ajax.

A telephone call to the Queen's Park Faculty Office elicited the information that there were approximately 420 students registered early in the year. Since then a number had discontinued their course, reducing the number.

From the paper The Varsity made the following calculations:

No. obtaining honour standing...	66
No. obtaining pass standing...	293
(many of these do have to write supplementals)
Number passing	359
This works out to be about 86 percent. The percentage of failure then works out to be 14.
In an interview Dean Young stated that the actual number of failures was only 9 percent of the number writing. In normal years the number is about 24 percent of the number writing.
The Dean said that there was absolutely no intention of failing students because of the large numbers in attendance; such an idea was ridiculous.
"The first year students have made a fine showing and I have no doubt that those from Ajax will do equally well," continued the Dean.

Indifference

Last evening an incident occurred which to put it mildly, was most embarrassing for those concerned.

The Engineering Society had secured the presence of Dean Young to give a talk on the engineering profession. This was for the benefit of the "would-be-engineers" of Ajax.

At this meeting there were at the most only two dozen who showed up. It was hardly representative of the some 1,350 students here.

The Varsity, which perhaps by reason of its position, is in touch with various activities has felt that there is deplorable indifference on the part of the students to the many varied programs planned for them.

The Glee Club which is ambitiously attempting to put on a fine program in a few weeks' time is rehearsing with only a few although they are doing excellent work under Mr. Olive. Their tone is very fine but they lack numbers. Surely out of a student population such as Ajax possesses there are more than five who can sing!

While we do not wish to emphasize it at this point The Varsity has struggled along with about half a dozen reliable men and has put out the paper twice weekly. Surely there are more than that number from Ajax who can write!

The Engineering Society has sold only a little over two hundred tickets for its dinner in June.

From these facts one must infer that Ajax students, because they are living in a world away from the city, have become indifferent to everything except their own small day-to-day living, and that their interests have become very narrow and self-centred.

If such be the case the Engineering Profession to which they aspire will have no room for them. The Engineer is a man with a professional standing. He is looked up to by members of the community and is expected to contribute his share to the life of the community. His interests extend far beyond his drafting table and his education should include far more than just calculus and statics. He is looked up to as a man with education and an enlightened citizen who understands not only the machinery with which he is working but the forces underlying our national and international problems.

He is also expected to be alive professionally and to take an active interest in what his associates are doing.

The Engineering Professional Association is contacting firms in order that when we graduate there will be positions open for us. It is doing this because it is interested in our welfare. It is up to us to show them through our interest in the activities pertaining to our profession that we are worthy of the work being done on our behalf.

It is time for Ajax students to come out of their shells and back their community activities. J.F.F.

Art, Music and Drama

THE PROMENADE

Tuesday evening Varsity Arena was the scene of the presentation by the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra of this year's fourth Prom Concert before an audience of approximately 6,000 persons. Unfortunately, and as per usual, the first selection of the evening was spoiled by late-comers who persist in creating a "bustle" and "shuffle" in the passages, and, although they probably do not realize it, they make listening very difficult for those already seated. It would seem that a good idea would be to have "QUIET PLEASE" signs conspicuously displayed while the orchestra is playing, and/or have the ushers quieten the crowd. Coincidentally the first selections at the Proms have all seemed to include quiet solo passages which are lost in the aforementioned extraneous noises.

The opening offering, Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz" was too quiet to take the first place in the programme. In this number the French Horns were not up to their usual standard, but all the fiddle sections were very good, particularly the first violins.

The second work, "Witches Ride" and "Gingerbread Valse" from "Hansel and Gretel" (Humperdinck) was most delightful with the well-presented flute passage. The Tuba and Trombones carried a short repartee then the lovely familiar melody was passed from section to section of the orchestra in a harmonious "playful" mood.

Haydn's London Symphony (No. 2 in D Major) gave the first a good chance to display their skill. They certainly did credit to this lovely work ably assisted by the flutes and the (2) harps.

Albeniz' Triana was very well received, and understandably so, with its exhilarating rhythmic xylophone runs and

MUTTS AND MAKALOFF

In this article I wish to write about mutts and Makaloff. Since both are here at Haystax, all the inmates of this great college should be interested in both these topics. Being on The Varsity staff as a snoop, I learned to always start an article with the most important subject first. So I'll start off with something about dogs.

Dogs as you know, have four legs, one head, and one tail, although some of them have one and one-half heads, three legs, and split tails. The last part of the above statement does not apply to the dogs at Haystax.

As I belong to the "Be dumb to kind animals" club and the Art House committee, I have to like these animals. I do my best not to kick and abuse these beautiful creatures. But in time one can get used to them and their habits, and also one can learn to like them. Some of the boys at Haystax have already learned their habits such as 'loafing around the messhall, sleeping about the grounds and academic area, and other dog's habits.

Myself, I can't as yet see the light of these mutts doings, and they annoy me something terrible. For instance, when I'm in the messhall I'm like everyone else. I love to sloop my soup, crack my crackers, and chew my stew to the music that the teeth make when the tongue, lips and food form a hammer and bang against them. I would like to do this in peace and quiet. But since the flea's answer to the housing shortage is around I can't enjoy my meal hours anymore. The dogs always jump up on my section of the table and start devouring my edibles. I have to eat very fast so I can have my share of the food. My butter ration is always duded for and he usually wins. I would like to tap him gently so that he would soar out of Haystax, but as soon as I raise my hand to strike the canine, everyone in the vicinity gives me a very nasty stare which makes me shrink to the floor.

I can put up with the messhall

Hoarding?

The technical library is conducting a campaign aimed at recovering a number of strayed books. If one has strayed into your room and if your heart has not been touched by the campaign, consider the fact that you are inconveniencing others. As all technical books are in short supply, your hoarding is preventing the rest of us from making use of those volumes.

do if that would be all I had to put up with. Unfortunately, I am not so lucky as to not have the hounds follow me. It's when I go to lectures that annoys me most as he's always wanting to borrow my pen.

Sometimes when I go to lectures I go a different route so as to elude the pooches and some mornings I succeed. However on some of these mornings after I get comfortably seated and am feeling very smart for giving the dogs the slip, I hear a whining and scratching at the door. I immediately crawl under the benches and pray that no one will answer the whine. As usual, some one arrives late for lectures and lets the mutt in. He does not take very long to smell me out and soon a battle rages. We both start growling and show our molars to each other, but no matter whose molars I borrow, (there is no molar solution) they are always smaller than the dog's, so I raise the white flag and let him have my seat.

I don't mind him sitting in the calculus and geometry classes as I get so confused in these lectures that I don't do any writing anyway. But when he grabs my pen in chemistry and electricity lectures I get mad. In these classes I want to duplicate what's on the blackboard even if it is in Greek, and the teacher doesn't leave these configurations no for very long.

Sometimes I get so mad that I want to strike the animal but every time I look into the dogs eyes, I see the faces of all my close friends and being a guy that would not offend my pals, I don't do anything to the flea house.

Speaking of the resemblances of hounds to humans brings me to the subject of M. M. Makaloff.

Makaloff was born and raised in the country of Middle Slobovia before he came to our great school. He proudly says that he at one time lived next door to Lena the Hyena,

BOXLACROSSESOFTBALLHORSESHOESHOW (Breath)

It does take your breath away when you realize that 13 sports events are to be run off this coming Monday plus a floor show after the sports. Here are the contestants, the sport and time, but you will have to come out yourself for the fun.

The Tip Top team will be out at 7:30 to play the Jaxs in baseball, still on baseball we have two girl teams, The Dorsts and The Simpson Grads.

Box Lacrosse enthusiasts may feast their eyes on cushion one at 7:30 as the Scarborough Grads battle it out with The Jaxs.

If you turn your head you will see at 7:30 in cushion two, a special challenge game between Residence 732 and 727. On cushion three the great 729 residence (my residence—who cares get off the,—O.K.) who will battle it out with Residence 734.

Horseshoes will also feature in the evening sports. At 6:15 Residence 722 will pound the turf with 723-A. At 7:15 Residence 723 enters its "B" team to play with Residence 737. Residence 736 will put a team into the field against 730 at 8:15. All horseshoe games will take place on the pits east of the Recreation Hall.

Tennis matches between Residences 734 and 726 at 6:00, Residences 722-A and 725-A at 7:00 and Residences 729-B and 727-B at 8:00, these should not be missed. It looks as if the Athletic Office will make Athletes out of the non-participants on Monday if you are to see all of these shows. Never fear though, because you will be able to rest the sore shanks at the big show in the Recreation Hall which starts at 9:15.

Spring Training

Those interested in playing for the Jax Rugby Team next year or the Blue and White are asked to be in attendance next Tuesday at 7:30 for the opening of Rugby Spring Training.

Out For The Kill

Two bloody battles of lacrosse were fought in No. 1 hockey cushion Wednesday evening in front of a few spectators who enjoy seeing men attempt to knock each other's teeth out. The first game played was between Residences 724 and 727. Anderson's boys from 724 took the lead from Olsen's crew by a score of 3 to 0, in the first quarter. The second quarter was a tough battle with no goals scored. Two goals were scored by Res. 727 and in return 724 scored three times, the final score being 724, 6, and 727, 2.

The second game of the evening was with 722 and 733. This game was a little fiercer than the first and the boys really fought it out. The first quarter was contested very roughly with 722 scoring twice and 733 once, the second and third quarters were rougher still as the players put forth their best effort. 722 finally won the battle with a total score of 6 and Res. 733 ended with 3 goals.

ZIEGFELD FOLLIES

A glorious extravaganza of color, music, and alluring beauty featured in M.G.M.'s technicolor production of the "Ziegfeld Follies of 1946". This musical revue is now playing at Loew's Theatre in Toronto. This is one of the few musical productions on the screen without any plot.

The Ziegfeld Follies of 1946 is composed of typical Ziegfeld's numbers and starring 32 well-known actors and actresses of opera, stage and screen. All scenes were made in lavishing color which showed the touch of Ziegfeld and added greatly to the enjoyment of the audience. This screen play would have done justice to his name as it contained his style in color blending and directing.

Fred Astaire, who appears in three of the scenes, opens the revue with a dance routine accompanied by Lucille Bremer. He later does a Limehouse Blues number and also appears with Gene Kelly in a dance duet. Lucille Ball makes her entrance as an exotic lion-tamer in a colorful circus scene in which a merry-go-round with live horses appears. Virginia O'Brien also sings a comical song.

The beautiful Esther Williams stars in an underwater ballet in an aquatic floral setting. Lena Horne pours forth a torrid love song as only she could present it. A burlesque ditty by Victor Moore and Edward Arnold brings many laughs. (It's the old gag about "Give the judge the two dollars.") Judy Garland has a part which throws satire at one of M-G-M's own big stars when she gives an interview to the press.

A look into the future shows Red Skelton imitating a television announcer on the Guzzlers' Gin Program. Fanny Brice and Hume Cronyn do a skit about winning the sweepstakes. Bunin's Pupets appear representing several big actors. These and many other good acts lend themselves to a very enjoyable program. It is one of the best musical reviews produced for screen and would indeed have made Ziegfeld proud and happy.

THE SPIRAL STAIRCASE

One of the finest mystery thrillers of the season, "The Spiral Staircase" is now in its opening week at Shea's Theatre in Toronto. This production, although it deviates from the book by the same name in many places, is still one of the best motion pictures of mystery filmed recently. The film has all the thrills, suspense, and drama of the book and it is exceptionally well re-enacted and directed.

The starring feminine role of Helen, the girl who has lost her voice, is portrayed superbly by Dorothy McGuire. Although she spoke only half a dozen words throughout the entire picture she expressed the emotions and showed the exceptional acting ability that many other actresses feared they could not reproduce when they refused the role of Helen. George Brent played the starring male role of Professor Warren.

The setting is in the vicinity of a small New England town at the turn of the century. Of course the most thrilling parts come during a rainy, story, dark night. The characters in this production are all the type to be suspected except the murder. Professor Warren has an idea that all people who are physically disabled should not live and he sets about to carry out that idea. Doctor Parry who likes Helen very much is deeply concerned about her case and also about her safety.

The fact that Helen is a mute makes her an eligible person to be murdered as many girls were murdered in a very short time interval. Parry wants to take Helen to some specialists to try and have her voice restored, this she lost in childhood when she was terror-stricken. The professor chooses the time for his act well when one of his servants is on an errand, another is intoxicated, still another is locked in a closet. From there on the thrills and suspense build and appreciation of these can only be gained by seeing the picture. Mrs. Warren is played by Ethel Barrymore.

The "Polvetsian Dances" from Borodin's "Prince Igor" was loudly acclaimed by the enthusiastic audience. This piece is very powerful, seems to pick the listeners up in dynamic embrace with a surging rhythmic "grasp." The synchronism of the various sections was noteworthy in this rendition.

Guest conductor Frieder Wiessmann has conducted in Berlin, Munster, Konigsberg, Dresden, Amsterdam, Buenos Aires and more recently in New York, New Jersey and Scranton. Both on the European and North American Continents he has gained distinction as a conductor for recordings. His style is not as picturesque as that of Percy Grainger but he gets better results. This is all the more impressive when one realizes that he conducted almost the entire programme from memory, using music only for some vocals. Also he did not use a baton at any time. He puts a terrific effort into his conducting, drawing the music out of the orchestra in a very satisfactory manner. He has good control, the only criticism of this being when once or twice the orchestra tended to "drown out" Donald Dame, guest singer.

Donald Dame entered Varsity Arena with a self-assured air that immediately put the audience at ease. His rendition of "Il Mio Tesoro" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni" was beautiful to say the least. His rich tenor voice was fully appreciated by all but unfortunately was not powerful enough to reach all of the audience at all times. Realizing this, this personable young man took particular care to see that all parts of the audience had an opportunity to see and hear him. He accomplished this by slowly turning around on his "stage" facing each section of the arena in turn.

Leo Barkin gave able piano accompaniment to the next group of songs that Mr. Dame sang, the first of which was a very light Old-English type song "Good Ale" by Peter Warlock. Mr. Dame's gestures and facial expressions in this private "hics" and "staggers," etc., according to the requirements of the song. As you know, Donald Dame appears on a weekly radio programme sponsored by a well known aspirin manufacturer and he could not let the opportunity to make a plug go by. So at the conclusion of the "Good Ale" he quipped "They tell me that for a headache aspirin is good"—he went on in the approved commercialistic manner to use the phrase—"don't just ask for aspirin" and gave a knowing wink to a delighted customarily predominantly feminine audience.

"Yours Is My Heart Alone" by Franz Lehar was beautifully rendered and appreciated more than "I Heard You Singing" (Coates). Mr. Dame was recalled by a hearty Wed., May 22nd, Les Brown and his Band of Renown came to the Palace Pier for their first Toronto appearance in several years. Featured vocalists with the band were the curvaceous beautiful Doris Day and Butch Stone. Strictly for dancing, Les featured a smooth sentimental style of music. Unfortunately however, his music showed a regrettable lack of good solos, with the possible exception of "Mexican Hat Dance", his first best-selling record.

Although we couldn't get particular enthused about the style of music he played, two bright spots on the program were the songs by Doris Day and Butch Stone.

For those who are interested, we offer a little quick gen on Mrs. George Weider (Miss Day to you). Twice-married, 24-year-old Doris, has been singing with the band off and on for seven years. Cincinnati born, she expects to leave the band shortly to return to California and her husband.

Les, himself, started out as a band leader while at Duke University. From there he went straight to New York, and since then has been steadily climbing in popularity.

Butch Stone, a Freddy Martin import, put on a great show. His numbers which really rocked the crowd were, "Frim Fram Sauce", "A Good Man Is Hard To Find", and the Jimmy Rushing classic, "I'm Gonna Move To The Outskirts Of Town".

The rest of his band does not merit any particular mention; however, they fitted in well with Brown's commercial arrangements. P.S. Don't miss Lionel Hampton, same place, June 18th.

which accounts for his features at present.

His parents were kind to him and loved him as he was all they had. They did all they could to make his life a good and prosperous one and so he could live a long life. His par-novation for encores. He gave a short account of the history of his first encore. It was difficult to hear his announcement so The Varsity obtained the facts from Mr. Dame in person during the intermission. They are as follows: He calls it his "Montey Wooley Song". It first appeared in the New Yorker Magazine as a poem entitled "The Complete Misanthropist" or "I Love To Think of Things I Hate," written by Morris Bishop and the song version is by Emmanuel Rosenberg. It is a very short song in which the singer enumerates an all-inclusive list of things he hates ending with a shout "And I Hate You!" while the singer indicates some unfortunate soul in the audience.

As a second encore he sang "Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes" while a breathless hush fell over the audience. The end of this selection was heralded by thunderous applause interspersed with cheers and whistles. It would have been no surprise if some girl had screamed "DONNIE".

"Le Reve" from "Manon" (Massenet) was sung in an unscheduled position of the programme, superbly rendered as was "O Paradiso" from "L'Africana" (Meyerbeer) at the conclusion of which he was recalled twice by encore-minded audience whose desires were frustrated as the programme was being broadcast.

The orchestral encore was the very familiar favorite "Pavanne" from Morton Gould's "Symphonette Americana." In this selection all sections of the orchestra seemed to be very well trained particularly oboes, trombones, percussion and firsts.

Next week Nan Merriman, Mezzo-Soprano, will sing "Mon Coeur s'Ouvre A Ta Voix" from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah"; "Look Edwin" by Wayenaar; "B for Barney"; "I Hate Music" by Bernstein; "Connais-Tu Le Pays?" and "Me Voici Dans Son Boudoir" both from Thomas' "Mignon". The orchestral selections will include music from Wagner's "Die Walkure"; the Cavalcade from Romeo and Juliet by Zandonai; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun"; "Salome's Dance" by Richard Strauss and the overture to the "Gypsy Baron" by Johann Strauss. D.B. JOLLY.

Surveying Exam Scooped!

Your faithful servants, the staff of the Varsity, have done it again! Exactly thirty-six hours prior to the crucial test, the complete paper, questions, comments, and all, are now made public.

We feel that this data will be greatly appreciated and used by the student body as a whole, as it is undoubtedly of enormous help to the Ajax student. With such knowledge absorbed beforehand, he need fear no possibility of getting less than seventy-five percent.

This great news was obtained late last night following a gruelling session in which a certain party refused to turn in their magnifying glass until they had got a look at Saturday's paper. It was tough and go for several hours but finally superior reasoning and argumentative ability won out.

ents tried to amuse M.M.M. as much as possible. Their favourite game when Makaloff was young, was to place him in a yam sack, tie the open end, and throw the bag into the local river. M.M.M.'s parents must have liked this game as every time Makaloff came back they threw him in again. Also, they gave him an atomic bomb to teeth on. When Makaloff grew older, his parents found a new game to play. Pop and mom tied Mak to the railway track just before the train passed over that particular spot. These and other games Makaloff took to heart even when his folks brought him a thirteen inch knife for his birthday.

And so Makaloff grew in this environment until he decided to go to college (Haystax being the lucky one to enroll him). At college he became famous by shaking hands with everyone and organizing different clubs and pubs. The result of his noble efforts finally winding up in him becoming Mayor Makaloff of Haystax.

Business Courses Given By U. of T.

A new milestone in business education in Canada will be reached on June 6 when the University of Toronto will award the degree of Master of Commerce (M.Com.) to a class of eleven men, all but two of them veterans. An additional group of eight men will probably complete the requirements during the summer months. These men constitute the first groups ever to complete an organized course of study leading to a graduate degree in Business Administration in the University, although M.Com. degrees have been awarded to a total of five students in the past seven years on the basis of individually guided study.

For Post Graduates
Under the program now in operation at the University of Toronto, the M.Com. degree is granted on the completion of an intensive course of study in business administration, including such subjects as Corporation Finance, Sales Management, Industrial Management, Business Statistics, Industrial Relations and International Trade. The course is open only to college graduates and requires from one to two years of study, depending upon the amount of undergraduate credit in such subjects as economics, accounting, and statistical method. Each student is expected to specialize in one of the major branches of business administration, such as marketing, finance, production or labour relations, but is required, in order to maintain a broad perspective, to study the fundamentals of the other branches as well.

The new program leading to the M.Com. degree marks the first effort by the University of Toronto to provide a full curriculum in Business Administration, but education in business subjects has been carried on in an ever-increasing degree since 1901. At the present time there are three other courses which include substantial proportions of business and commercial subjects, designed to meet the needs of students of varying interests and attainments.

Undergraduate Courses
By far the oldest of the courses is the four-year Honour Course in Commerce and Finance leading to the degree of Bachelor of Commerce, established in 1920 as the culmination of a development in under-graduate instruction which began in 1901 with a two-year Diploma course. This course has had more than 800 graduates and has had an enrolment in the 1945-1946 session of more than 600 students. Heavy emphasis is placed on economics, but the course also includes a substantial number of other "Arts" subjects such as languages, political science, history and mathematics, and provides an introduction to business administration by means of elementary courses in marketing, corporation finance and labor problems, as well as several courses in accounting. The University does not treat the curriculum as a professional one; in fact, it is felt that a great deal of the strength of this undergraduate course lies in the maintenance of the Arts tradition and that professional education can be given most effectively at the graduate level.

For Veterans Only

The "Certificate Course in Business", covering a period of ten months and open only to veterans, is intended to assist men who were prevented by the War from proceeding with a University course to prepare themselves for jobs. The curriculum includes English, economics and political science as well as short courses in accounting, corporation finance, commercial law, statistics and a survey course in business administration. The University believes that this program provides a sound foundation for men who elect to gain their professional training "on the job" rather than by means of a more extended and detailed University course. About 40 men have completed the course since its inauguration in 1945, and an additional 375 are enrolled at the present time.

Engineering and Business
A fourth University of Toronto course open to men contemplating business careers is the four-year curriculum in Engineering and Business offered by the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering. The first class in this course will receive their degrees in 1948. The program consists of a basic engineering course, with a number of business subjects offered in the third and fourth years in place of the advanced work in specialized branches of engineering taken during those years by students in the other engineering courses. It is designed for men who intend to use their engineering training in administrative rather than technical positions.

Speaker at Dinner

Ajax Skulemen are going to have a chance of hearing the only Engineer in Canada's Cabinet next Wednesday night at the Annual School Dinner in the Cafeteria.

Mr. Howe at one time was a Civil engineer taking his degree at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and for five years was a professor at Dalhousie University.

During the war he was Minister of Munitions and had a great deal to do with the building of the D.I.L. plant at Ajax.

After the war he became Minister of Reconstruction and it was largely through his efforts that the University of Toronto was able to obtain the use of Ajax for accommodation of the 1400 students enrolled at the School of Applied Science.

Mr. Howe is a very interesting speaker and the Engineering Society are fortunate in securing him for their dinner which will be held next Wednesday evening.

Other guests will represent the Board of Governors and the Faculty of the University.

Games, Revue Feature At Gala Athletic Night

McCreedy's Men Win Pennant

A capacity crowd filled the Recreation Hall last night to see and hear "Williams Revue" which climaxed the fourth great Athletic Night. Dean Young presented his pennant to Tommy McCreedy on behalf of the "Old Men" of Residence 737.

Buff Horton promised to make up for "Dilaney's Dilemma," and judging from the applause, he certainly succeeded. The M.C., Wally Riddell, announced, "There will be whistling in the first six hundred rows only." To most observers, it sounded as if there were 700 doing it. "It was the best show that I've ever seen from backstage," said Dave Philpott.

Geometry Lecturer Musician At Heart

Embryonic engineers are continuously being reminded of the fact that an engineer is expected to have interests other than those technically associated with the engineering field. That outstanding examples of engineers who have made a success of their interests in such things as the fine arts should be drawn to the students' attention was one of the factors that inspired this story. It is a human interest story, the story of a man on the academic staff here at Ajax who has had such success as a composer that the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra, the Toronto Conservatory of Music Orchestra and others have performed his works.

A Skuleman

Our "hidden genius" is a graduate of "school", having obtained his B.A.Sc. in Electrical Engineering in 1929. He then became a demonstrator in the electrical labs in the "little red school-house". In 1932 he entered the Toronto Conservatory of Music (studying under Dr. Peaker, Director of the Toronto Conservatory and leader of Hart House Glee Club) and graduated as a Mus. B. in 1936. An interesting fact is that as a child he hated to take piano lessons. He was forced to take piano lessons from the age of 8 to the age of 10. He then dropped them, picking them up again in 1932.

Navigation Instructor

All of his performed music was written in the period 1936-1940. In 1941 he enlisted in the R.C.A.F. and saw 4-year-4-month service as an instructor in navigation at No. 1 A.O.S.—Malton; No. 1 I.T.S.—Eglington Hunt Club, Toronto; and No. 4 A.O.S.—London, Ontario.

Composed Music

He has composed 5 songs, 2 piano solos, 2 pieces for small orchestra, 1 piece for string orchestra and 1 for string quartet. His piece for string orchestra entitled "Allegro for Strings" was performed by the Toronto Philharmonic, the Conservatory Orchestra, and Alex. Chuhaldin's "Melodic Strings". His "Fantasy for Small Orchestra" was performed by the Conservatory Orchestra, and Samuel Hershenson has conducted the other selections for small orchestra, a rhapsody.

The old Conservatory "Chamber-Music Club" saw the performance of some of his songs which are solos (with piano accompaniment) of the serious type such as Schubert and Bach wrote. One is "Autumn Song", a musical interpretation of the poem by Blaise Cendrars. Another is called "Loveliest of Trees" from Shropshire Lad, by A. E. Houseman. He also set A. J. M. Smith's poem, "The Lonely Land", to music.

Natural Manner

When asked what procedure he uses to compose, whether, being an engineer, he uses some sort of mathematical formula or composes from the heart according to inspirations he replied "I don't believe

Phyllis Worton, was liked most by the audience. She sang "Two, Two," and "An Hour Never Passes," and then was called back for more.

The Carletts, four pretty dancers, made a hit. The boys' went wild over their rendition of an old-fashioned Can-Can. Some exceptional acrobatic dancing was done by young Snooks Newton.

George Luscombs appeared twice, playing Hot Boogie Woogie, and singing some of his own songs in "Fats" Waller style. Raymond Low put on a great display of magic assisted by Ajax's own John Waldron. His dexterity with a pack of cards amazed everyone.

The revue was organized by Merlye Williams in 1939 and has played to hundreds of troop audiences all over Ontario. Wally Riddell said that the audience was "swell," "tops." "They were really on the bit, their kibitzing helps to make a better show."

The stage crew were hampered again, by the lack of a curtain, and the fact that they were late in being told of the show but they came through and kept things running smoothly.

Gord Alyson played the piano while the revue was being prepared. After the show the Athletic Department were hosts to the baseball team and to the revue over a lunch of sandwiches, cake and coffee at a social get-together.

A sing-song was soon under way which lasted until the arrival of the bus man announcing that it was time to hit the trail.

A girls' softball game had been planned between two city girls teams but another engagement prevented them from showing up—much to the disappointment of those who had been looking forward to a fast game between two smart feminine teams.

Games On Jambes Paper Shortage

As one of our female students was strolling down the hall in Hart House a Varsity reporter happened to notice some rather odd marks on her legs. You see there are so few female legs on the campus that every time any appear they are closely scrutinized. On this occasion it was found that the jambes were decorated with "noughts and crosses" and the reporter was very interested in investigating these. So you want to know who the girl was, well it was none other than Joan Hobbs and one of the boys who was passing said, "the game should prove very popular if only there were more legs to play on." It is amazing what one discovers when one roams around just looking at legs. If any other odd games should be started, the Varsity would like to hear about them and perhaps our sports editor could write an article about them. We would like to hear from our readers concerning this latest pastime and to know what they think of it. (Is your face red, Joan?)

Sports Editor's Note—I would be glad to help in promoting such good sport.

POWDERS AND PILLS FOR JAXMEN'S ILLS

By OWEN J. LE MYRE

Situated on the corner of College Avenue and King's Road is the building where we may all visit sometime during our school year in order to get relief from our ailments. (This does not include relief from hangovers which were the result of an evening at the local "Villa"). A well equipped and fully authorized private hospital is at your disposal and you may reach it by calling LOCAL 116. There is someone on call at all times but this is only in case of emergency.

If you have any medical problem or wish consultation the office hours are from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. and you should call between those hours if your case is not an emergency. If, however, a case of emergency arises the hospital should be notified as soon as possible at the above mentioned telephone number. There is a constant watch kept and some member of the hospital staff will answer all calls.

When you visit this building you find just inside the door an information wicket. From this the welcoming voice of Miss Scott, secretary, comes but if Miss Scott does not know you have entered you must push the button at one side of the wicket. A note of your presence is then made and you wait in "lobby" where you can read magazines until it is your turn to see the doctor.

The staff consists of two doctors and at present three nurses but the nursing staff varies as the number of patients and directly as the season. That is to say in the winter months there are more nurses; for at one time last term there were fifteen patients in the hospital. With the pleasant spring weather (when it does not rain) there is very little disease. In case an epidemic did break out the hospital could accommodate twenty-two patients.

Doctor MacKenzie is in charge of the hospital and is assisted by Dr. Rogee and nurses Hughes, Holman, and Williamson. Miss Hughes is the supervisor of the nursing staff and she is also the X-Ray technician. The nurses live in residence at the hospital where they have the best wing furnished with sleeping accommodations and a pleasant living room. The doctors live in the local area.

This little hospital is equipped to handle any emergency but if at all possible, serious cases would be moved to Toronto or Oshawa where more facilities are available. The hospital has its own ambulance for the latter purpose or for local work such as moving a patient from his residence to the place where his ailments could be looked after.

There are all the sections of a big hospital in our local one. It has a fully equipped surgery capable of doing any major operation; the limitations of the surgery are only in the limitations of the staff. The in the limitations of the staff. The operation room is lighted by six ordinary office lamps, a large fixed lamp. These give excellent lighting in the room. There is also a portable sterilizer in the room.

The X-Ray machine is of the portable type and is used in routine checks of chest or extremities. It is limited in that it can not be used for stomach X-Ray photography because it is not powerful enough to penetrate the barium compound the patient must take before one of these pictures are taken. The dispensary is also well stocked with all the widely used constituents used in medicine.

There are two first aid rooms (M. I. Rooms) but only one is in use at present. In these latter rooms there are heat treatment lamps for relief in pain caused by local chills. There is also a large sterilizer for general use. The hospital has 4 wards but it can set up 6 if necessary; there is one with 8 beds, two with 2, and two others can be set up. All beds are of the adjustable hospital type. There are special hospital tables for those who wish to study but this is discouraged by the staff for it slows down the speed of recovery.

A diet kitchen is also part of the establishment and is fitted with a large refrigerator, an electric stove, and all other necessary utensils. All X-Ray plates are developed in a dark room in the building. There is a large storage room for these X-Ray pictures next to the dark room. The next place of interest is the plaster room where plaster casts are made. The laboratory is equipped to do more complicated work than it is used for at present.

Arrangements are being made with D.V.A. to have the campus hospital on the same basis for ex-service students as any military hospital but at present students do not receive any such grants as are received in a military are not payable to students in our hospital.

Athletic Night

One of the regular features of Ajax life during the past winter has been the monthly Athletic Night held in the Recreation Hall. These nights have already become part of the "Ajax Tradition" which is being gradually built up over the course of time.

The primary purpose of these nights is to provide a background for the presentation of the Dean Young Pennant.

This pennant, donated by Dean C. R. Young, is presented to the residence which has secured the highest number of points in inter-residence sports activities during the previous month.

By being something tangible for which to strive, sporting competition at Ajax has been greatly stimulated by the award.

Far too often, collegiate sports life has tended to centre around "the big team" which represents the school inter-college competitions, and which naturally becomes the centre of its sports life.

Unfortunately the number of participants on the team is limited to only a few top ranking athletes, which leaves little opportunity for the man with only moderate athletic ability.

While the "big time" or "profession.1" tendency in sport is not without its merits, there is a woeful lack of proper balance between the emphasis placed upon "professionals" and "amateurs."

At Ajax a far greater percentage of the student body have had a chance to participate. With a limited number of house members, each man has been encouraged to compete—indeed, he has the responsibility of supporting his house team. Commuting students too have shown keen interest and deserve a great deal of credit, more so, in view of the added sacrifices made to stay behind for practice and games.

The individual, in accepting his responsibility, takes a greater interest in his own team's progress than had he merely sat back on the sidelines.

It is gratifying to note this wholesome tendency of Ajax sport encouraged by the organization of inter-house activities arranged by the Athletic Directorate and stimulated by the Dean Young Pennant, the laurel wreath, to the winner of the monthly inter-house competitions.

A secondary purpose of the Athletic Nights, is to provide a community activity for the life of Ajax Skulemen. Man is gregarious by nature and craves the company of his fellows. The formal atmosphere of the classroom helps but because of its formality it does not go far enough in satisfying that craving. The program gives a setting to the presentation and an atmosphere of relaxation where Skulemen "can be themselves."

Among the little known facts concerning the N ghts is that the artists who contribute, do so without remuneration, and any expenses incurred as far as transportation is concerned have been met with in the past by the Engineering Society.

The enthusiastic crowd which attended last evening must have been encouraging to those who assume the responsibility of making the arrangements.

Residence 737 is to be congratulated for its good showing.

A genial field and track meet is being planned by the athletic directorate and possibly at our next "night," individual prizes may feature more prominently than they have done so in the past.

Once a time upon at the College of Otnoro; the student body decided to have a scoop newspaper to use in the telephone booths??? (Eshbaum's Handbook was printed on hard paper as are many catalogues). To write and edit such a tabloid a group of genuses gathered together from wide and near to explore the possibilities of such an enterprise. After weeks and months and even minutes of conference an idea struck one of the genius and he was knocked unconscious for a few days. This was no impediment since most of the students went around unconscious anyway). So now there were all the genwines (Speaking of wines the best I "Shut up, Etep," minus one bashing their heads together "ouch," said Etep Topphish as Eymel's head hit his. The former wrote a column called "Talking About Nothing" and the latter wrote all sorts of drib drab in order to fill the paper. Finally the great brains came out of the huddle (auddle that is not cuddle) with their pockets hanging out and decided that the College of Otnoro would have a newspaper.

After several successful issues had gone to press, the rag having been filled with news copied from memo pads Sahib Mahgrib decided that the paper would look better if a few letters of the alphabet were printed on the memo pads. The biggest difficulty now was to find a way to get these letters onto the paper. There were in the office a few machines called typewriters but no one knew how to operate them. Many long hours were wasted trying to find out how to manipulate these toys and finally Semej Ledit had a brain wave. (This wave has a much shorter length than light since Semej was very bright). He wondered what would happen if he put paper in the machine and pushed down on the little buttons. Yes, he hit the jackpot for little black letters appeared on the paper and from then on it was straight sailing. From then on the paper had a great mass of mixed letters in it. (It looked more like alphabet soup).

In putting the tabloid out work was started months in advance and every night the staff would go to the office and think. The odor of burning wood drifted about the small 50 x 30 rooms. Occasionally green shoots of corn sprouted from their ears. Since these men were also scientists they worked out a formula to turn these stalks into paper. It was decided to have the local printing company in the little town of Wo-hawaga print the paper and so it was necessary to go into the town every night the paper was going to press. The gang rented a car, a 1950 super deluxe job, not the one that Bugs used to drive. This one was driven by Newo Eymel, the staff driver, and one of the safest drivers who ever took the wheel. Even if he did occasionally chase foxes on his way back from the town to the campus.

When the gang went into the town to publish the paper they used to drive the printers mad by throwing type into the machines, dumping all the type onto the floor, and playing tag around the presses. This all made the work for the printers more enjoyable since it gave them some variety. Drawde Mdjoneski, the mess-about editor, would race back and forth crying because he was restless (meaning he had no rest) and wanted to go to bed in order to finish the last episode to the 12th dream in the serial. Ahtram Reboches, the only girl on the staff, walked up and

Litterature Canadienne

(PART ONE)

By ROBERT WEAVER

A number of columns have already been printed in this year's Varsity about specific Canadian books, as well as about the complex problems of Canadian writing in general. Unfortunately merit alone still cannot account for this emphasis; our interest in Canadian literature must, I suppose, be regarded as a sort of cultural nationalism, although we may possibly suggest that at certain times, because of the fundamental nature of literature itself, an apparent nationalism becomes something a great deal more. And this affords the only logical excuse for writing three more columns on Canadian literature at the present moment.

The not unimportant element of subjectivity always renders difficult the establishment of absolutely objective criteria for literary judgment. It is still possible to suggest, however, certain broad tendencies generally basic to almost all great literature: in lasting works, the particular usually attains a general significance; and most great writers are directly linked with a specific and well-defined culture and society, with a certain time and a definitely national existence. The development of a valid Canadian literature is therefore connected not so much with any theoretical and timeless supra-national culture as with an immediate and thorough understanding of Canadian life. When our literature becomes a truly valid Canadian literature, we will discover, possibly to our surprise, that it has also achieved a universal significance.

Today Canadian writing can attain a certain unique and immediate importance. Great Britain and Europe are tired, oppressed with tremendous material problems; the literature of the United States is perverted by its mass-produced popular culture. There are, of course, groups and individuals which rise above the prevailing trends. In Canada, however, we are still to a certain extent removed from these influences; it should still be possible for this country, fulfilling its well-known role of interpreter, to accept only the best offerings. It should be possible for our writers, apparently less immediately involved with the necessity of continuing to exist as truly creative artists in a hostile and indifferent society, to create work of real validity.

Such has not been the case, of course. Canadian critics offer numerous explanations, ranging from the purely social and economic through lack of tradition to absence of strong individual talents, for the weakness of our literature. It is not my immediate purpose to discuss these problems; I am only now interested in what has recently been done, in attempting to make readers of this column more completely aware of a limited progress they may easily have ignored.

As much as to commercial publishers, the literature of any country always owes a great deal to the "little" magazines. For many years there were few of these magazines in Canada, and even at the present moment we need many more. The Canadian Forum, both through its reviews and by the publication of numerous poems and short stories, has long afforded one of the few outlets for writing not completely derived from the nineteenth century. Unfortunately this magazine has shown a recent willingness to sacrifice literature for politics; numerous poems still appear in its pages, but short stories are now rarely printed and its reviewing is generally somewhat uninspired. The university quarterlies have also been helpful, the one published at Queen's being open to a fair amount of creative work and that printed at the University of Toronto providing an important critical forum, although its interest in strictly formal and frequently pedantic work has had a limiting effect.

Young readers may be more interested in Contemporary Verse, which is published in Vancouver. Many important poems have been published by this magazine, and its general policy is a tribute to the intelligent and balanced tastes of its editor. Montreal is a centre of literary activity at the present time, and the other important new magazine, Northern Review, is published in that city. All these magazines are important to Canadian writers; they should also be important to discerning readers.

Speaking OF SPORT

By PETE PHILPOTT

Aspirins! Aspirins!

With apologies to Carl at the Oshawa Press, our Compositor who doesn't like these types of head lines but that is what we have been eating after the big sports day. Challenge games between residences, shows and guest games all added to make this Sports Revue the most successful yet. Wait 'till you see what is planned for July fourth.

Sweet Music?

That's what is going on as this column is being written. The young ladies from The Myrtle Williams Revue are chortling gaily after a little midnight snack. The Athletic Office promises a bigger and better show next time if possible — thanks, girls; you made Ajax a lively place.

Rugby Practice

This evening at 7:30 there is going to be a rugby practice. All rugby players, past, present and future are asked to come out to the new rugby field south of residence 734. There is a hole in the fence behind 734 or 736 so you don't have to walk all the way around by the road. Don't forget; Boris, Sid, Céol and Mortimer, etc., 7:30 is Rugby Practice.

Girls' Softball

The girls from the offices, village and Skule have now organized a baseball team. You will have literally plenty of support.

Casualty List

Just in case our readers are interested to know in what subjects the Queen's Park boys fell down and have to write supplementals, The Varsity is giving a summary of the examination subjects on which students will be spending their vacation "genning up." The results were gleaned from last Wednesday's Globe and Mail. It may prove helpful.

Analytical Geometry took the most casualties with 51; Calculus came second with 42.

After that Surveying followed third with 31, while Statics was a close fourth with 25.

Chemistry with 15 came next, while Eng. and Soc. tied with Dynamics closely behind at 14.

Electricity and Mineralogy lab and English, were each responsible for five casualties.

Among Engineering Physics Students Properties of M. and H. took nine and Algebra and Calculus took six.

Tip Top Baseball

Tip-Top Tailors won 9-3 in a game of baseball against the U. of T. Jaxs on the East Diamond yesterday evening.

Adam, of Tip-Top knocked the first ball to Murphy who fumbled it. Murphy redeemed himself by catching a fly off Wing. Johnny Shore, who pitched the entire game, walked Napper. Two on base and Crenham up to bat. He hit a high fly over center and Mohon and Sedgley both headed for it, thinking the other would get it, but as is often the case, neither got it, so two runs were tucked up. The audience cheered frantically, so as not to give the Tip-Top team an inferiority complex early in the game.

The U. of T. Jaxs opened with little Fred Doty, who got out on first. Sedgley bounced a ball off the wrong end of the bat between short stop and pitcher to get on first. Rosen, the Jaxs' shortstop, got caught out making the score 2 to 1 for Tip-Tops.

Park for Tip-Tops eluded the first baseman who had the ball some-where on him and so got on first base. France, a Tip-Top left field man, bunted himself onto first. Gerald hit a two-bagger making the score 3-0 for Tip-Top. Napper then brought Wing in later.

Terror gripped the Tip-Top team as they saw Johnny McCreedy saunter out onto the field. The first ball went screaming up and up; it was a sure catch, but center and left stood petrified and the ball fell between them. McCreedy with a smile on his face sauntered to second base. The crowd went wild; we had a man on second. Taylor, the Jaxs' catcher, lobbed one to shortstop. Crenham on first fumbled the ball and Johnny McCreedy thundered home.

Tip-Top then came to bat, but were obviously so demoralized that they struck out or were caught out by Rosen and Murphy, one after another.

Aax returned to bat full of vim and vigor. Shore placed a nice one just short of the center field to get on first. Fred Doty got caught out on first as Shore thundered to second. Sedgley hammered the ball over centerfield, ending up on second with Shore on third. Rosen's job was clear, so, with tears in his eyes, he sacrificed to bring Shore home.

Tip-Top slouched off the field with no runs.

Ajax faced a new pitcher in this inning, McCown by his name. This fellow wound up with everything but his shoe-laces. "He'll walk you or kill you" was the crowd's advice to Murphy. Murphy walked, Mohon connected with the ball to send it out to third base. Third base threw it to second in hopes that it would mean a double out. Wing, the second baseman, fumbled the ball and so Murphy ended up on third with Mohon on first and Spence on second. Shore came up to bat and struck out. Doty was next to bat and was caught out. No runs for Ajax with the score, 5 to 3, for Tip-Tops.

The next half proved just as unlucky for Tip-Top except to show them that Johnny McCreedy catches flies with one hand.

The next inning opened with Sedgley for the Jax walking. Rosen struck out. McCreedy banged away at second baseman Wing who just couldn't touch Sedgley as he made a successful mad slide for second. McCreedy made first. Taylor was caught out but Sedgley made a dash for third equals a double out.

Gerald for the Tip-Tops sent a ball hurtling to centerfield where it was caught by Mohon. McCown went to bat swinging wildly at the first ball; the second swing was just as wild and the third very wild—he hit a homer to bring three scored no runs.

Tip-Top did no better. Johnny Shore fanned three in a row.

When Ajax came to bat it was "I'm laughing on the outside and crying in the inside" and nothing in between. Ecclestone, the star Tip-Top pitcher, was pitching. No runs.

At the end of the game the score stood at 9 to 3 for the visitors.

Blues Take Lions

The Ajax lacrosse fans last evening witnessed the first game in which the Ajax representative team played and beat the Scarboro Lions by a score of 13 to 6. Both teams showed good fighting spirit and battled every second of the game. Although the Ajaxers were not in as good shape as the Lions, due to the Engineers forty beers, the team kept pace with their fast opponents.

The game was played in four fifteen minute periods with a breathing spell of three minutes between the first and second quarters and third and fourth quarters. At half time, the players relaxed for approximately eight minutes.

The first quarter was played at a moderate pace with each team feeling each other out. Irwin, of the Lions, started the scoring with a goal from near the Jaxs' net. Griffiths scored the first goal for the Jaxs. Olsen later threw a beautiful pass to Shkordoff who took the ball the rest of the way in for another goal for Ajax. Watkins scored another goal for the home team while Suggett scored one for the Lions. The next two goals were for Ajax by Parker and Trower. Irwin again scored for the Lions which was the last goal of the first quarter.

In the second quarter, there seemed to be more fighting rather than playing. Each team was interested in checking their opponents and high and wild sticks flew in all directions. Each team scored a goal in this period.

The game dragged a little in the third quarter until players got back their second wind. Irwin and McCown of the Lions each scored a goal and Shkordoff scored two for Ajax.

In the last quarter, the game livened up with both teams playing some good lacrosse. Although the ball was hard to see in this quarter, the players were really playing their best. The Jaxs kept the Lions from scoring throughout the last period while they themselves got four goals. Anderson, Thorne and Watkins scored each for the Blues. The Ajax team showed some good playing in the last goal of the game. Shkordoff carried the ball to the Lions' half and passed a fast one to Watkins who in turn threw it to Anderson, and Anderson shot a fast one past the goalie.

The stars of the game were Shkordoff and Kelman of the Blue and White and Irwin of the Lions. Kelman did some terrific goalie work. It was his first time in a net in lacrosse and it looks as if the opponents of Ajax will have a difficult time in outwitting him. Shkordoff did some excellent ball-carrying work and was quite hard to stop once he got started. Irwin, of the Lions, played a very good game and shows strength and power.

The only penalty of the game was given to Harrison of the Lions, who was in the box for two minutes for tripping. "Ozark" Olsen received a face full of lacrosse stick in the last quarter which knocked him flat for a few minutes. He got up again and played the remaining game although slightly woozy. During the course of the game, the Ajaxers broke four lacrosse sticks.

After the whistle, both teams roared out their yell but the familiar strains of the Toke Olke was heard above the turmoil.

S.A.C. NOTES

With vacation time approaching, a number of ex-service students will be interested in financial aid during the short interim period before the commencement of the second year.

The Students' Administrative Council Office has made inquiries and has received two letters which are reprinted below.

The first letter is from the Unemployment Insurance Commission while the other letter is from the Department of Veterans' Affairs and deals with Out-of-Work Allowances.

Unemployment Insurance

Unemployment Insurance Commission,
Ottawa, May 20, 1946.

Mr. R. H. Irwin,
Students' Administrative Council,
Ajax, Ontario,
Dear Mr. Irwin:

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 16th respecting veterans who may be unemployed between the close of their first university year and the commencement of their second-year studies.

We are turning over your enquiry regarding Out-of-Work benefits to the Department of Veterans Affairs here, since the Unemployment Insurance Commission merely acts as paying agents for that department. Only persons discharged within the past 18 months are, of course, eligible for Out-of-Work allowances.

With regard to Unemployment Insurance Benefit, claimants are required to have had 180 contributions within the immediately preceding two years. Students who are unable to obtain suitable employment; are not eligible for Out-of-Work allowance, and have required number of contributions should apply for Unemployment Insurance Benefit. Persons honourably discharged from the armed forces who have been employed in insured employment for 90 days within any 12 month period following discharge are credited with contributions for the period spent in the armed forces subsequent to June 30, 1941.

We recommend students should apply for Out-of-Work allowance in preference to Unemployment Insurance benefit since the former expires 18 months after discharge.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) R. G. Barclay
Chief Insurance Officer.

Out-of-Work Allowances

Department of Veterans Affairs,
Ottawa, May 30, 1946.

Mr. R. H. Irwin,
Students' Administrative Council,
Ajax, Ontario,
Dear Mr. Irwin:

Your letter of May 16th addressed to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and replied to by Mr. R. G. Barclay, Chief Insurance Officer, has been passed to this Department for attention.

You inquire as to the possibilities of ex-service University students drawing out-of-work allowances for the period between the time the University closes and re-opens which would indicate in this case, will be approximately six weeks.

If there is no work available and the period you have reference to is within 18 months from date of discharge from the service, then the veteran will be entitled to make an application for out-of-work allowances. Each veteran will be required to register with the Employment Office and will be expected to accept any form of employment which he is physically able to do. Then, if there is no work available the out-of-work allowance may be paid if, as I have already stated, such per-

Glamorize Ajax Life

At Residence 726 the familiar ring of number please mingled with "your three minutes are up", resounded in the Common Room as the Bell Telephone girls danced and made merry with the men on Friday night.

Thirty-one girls were picked up at the corner of St. Clair and Yonge and taken "to one of the most enjoyable evenings I've ever had" as Mabel Robinson said.

The dance progressed very well, old telephone calls were recalled, discussion of the new type of relay, and how to tap telephone lines broke the thin ice. The climax of the evening came when the residence blossomed forth its hidden talent in the form of a southern skit. "I've led a sheltered life," said Phyllis Simpson, "but I've certainly learnt a lot tonight, from the play of course," (she informed us laughing).

At ten-thirty the party gathered together for a light snack of coffee, dough-nuts and cake. However, some girls were rather disappointed in the action of some men who "should not take so much hard soft drinks", as one disconcerted lass put it.

The girls left about midnight and as the bus passed out of sight, the men's attitude was expressed by Gord Baker, "Telephone Operators are swell numbers".

On Friday night, Residence 724 held a dance in their Common Room.

The girls were mostly from Oshawa and were transported to Ajax in chartered buses.

Various types of entertainment from elimination dances to amusing skits were concocted by the house committee. Dr. Millroy played a part of a clown in an original play.

There was food for every one's taste. There was cake with white icing and cake with brown icing, also two types of sandwiches—egg and cheese. Brian Hayser, a connoisseur of fine foods said, "The eats are damned good." This sumptuous repast was washed down with great draughts of apple juice.

The House Master acted as chaperone "despite this, the Engineers acted like gentlemen" said one pretty miss. "Any way I think he's cute" (it was not known whether the reference was to the House Master or to another grotesque picture of a Chemical Engineer on the wall).

The party ended at midnight, with both sexes and the House Master declaring that the party was a great success.

Residence 733 played hosts to girls from Toronto, Oshawa, Ajax, and also from the Bell Telephone Company at their dance held in the common room, Friday evening, May 17th.

Amid decorations of red, white and blue paper and soothing and diffused lights, the couples danced to the best music that was ever recorded. As there were approximately equal numbers of guests and hosts, the music kept playing the whole evening through to accommodate the dancers.

During a slight break in the evening the residents of 733 served their guests ice-cream, cookies and soft drinks which the girls enjoyed very much.

Without further ado the couples returned to their dancing in the common room, continuing until a few minutes after twelve with every one present thoroughly enjoyed.

The tears rolled down every one's cheeks as the students were bidding the girls adieu. This was the final act of a perfect evening in which both parties were happy as a result of a very successful dance.

id comes within 18 months from date of discharge, as the Act provides that out-of-work allowances may not be paid for any period beyond 18 months from date of discharge, and in no case beyond the period of service if less than 52 weeks, and a maximum of 52 weeks where the combined total of training benefits and out-of-work allowances equal 52 weeks.

In order to clarify this point, the following is an example:

If University allowance is paid for a period of 11 months out-of-work allowances can only be paid for one more month, making a combined total of 52 weeks, and each month for which out-of-work allowances are paid is reduced from the veteran's total entitlement period for training.

If you require further information at any time, it is suggested that you communicate direct with our Department of Veterans Affairs District Office, 55 York St., Toronto, as all matters pertaining to Training or any other rehabilitation measures are dealt direct through the District Office in which the veteran resides, and by following this procedure, considerable delay will be avoided in getting the information you require.

Yours very truly,
(sgd.) W. Holdsworth
Supervisor of Grants and Benefits.

down repeating Latin verses to herself.

At about 4 p.m. Ledoff usually comes out with "Gee I feel waffley hungry" and after Mangib has argued with everyone about head-lines the gang get ready to go for "cats".

Luap Revonoc, the boy who likes to see his name in type, was always found trying to set his name up in 3-inch type to use as a bi-line. At about school time the paper is ready to roll even if it is square. When this time comes everyone feels waffley so they go over to the Genogashaga Hotel and have double orders of waffles. (It is for this reason that the boys looked awful, I mean waffley when they come back from the town).

The car is used to dash over to the restaurant when the night's work is done. On one occasion the gang came out and piled into the car but Erymel found that the car would not move as he let out the break or the clutch or something. It was found that the vehicle was interlocked with a monstrous road repair machine. The boys went to work with sledge hammers, welding torches, and dynamite but it was all to no avail. A whole contingent of policemen arrived on the scene but both of these men could do no more than the boys. Finally the machine fell apart and the car was that any composer writes on a mathematical basis even if he says he does." What he does do is he tries to get a tune that comes as close to the natural manner of speaking the poem as possible and he uses the natural rhythm of the words. This is, of course, in reference to his musical version of poems. His orchestral selections are purely inspirational of a semi-symphonic nature. When a tune comes to him he gives it time to mature, he then decides what instrument it will be most effective for and scores the music for that instrument.

He is very fond of serious symphonic music but readily admits that modern or swing music certainly has its place in the musical world, particularly for dances, etc.

Teaches Day and Night

He is assistant to Professor Wardell, lecturer in Descriptive Geometry and is in charge of Engineering Drawing Classes in Building 310. He is bashful, amiable Bill Hachnel who, after a day of helping Engineering students with their Desc. Geom., etc., can be found at night teaching musical theory to Rehab Students at the Conservatory.

McAuliffe's Legs Win At 734 Wiener Roast

One of the first wiener roasts of the season at Ajax was held at Pickering Beach by Residence 734. Partners for the residents were from the Imperial Optical Company and Elizabeth Arden Beauty Salon, Toronto, Oshawa, Whitby and nearby localities. Although the sky was overcast earlier in the evening, it later cleared up and the moon and stars shone upon the merry makers the rest of the night.

The girls arrived at Residence 734 first, where they danced to recordings with their newly-acquainted hosts. The bus later conveyed the party to the beach, where a sing-song immediately begun.

After the singing was over, a beauty contest was held for the men, to find who had the boniest legs. The judges were Joan Mercer and Joan O'Brien from Oshawa and Grace Anderson of Whitby. The contestants were the pick of a contest held at 734 where the judges were Messrs. Wylie and Stefanyshyn. Out of the ten contestants at the beach "Chuff" Bester and Mike McAuliffe remained. Much time was spent in arguing who should be the winner and after the two contestants paraded before the judges, for a time, Mike McAuliffe, the president of the Engineering Society, was named winner.

Joan Mercer remarked, "He has the most knobby legs I've ever seen," while Joan O'Brien stated, "The curly hair on his legs is beautiful."

"I like the dimples in his knees," quoted Grace Anderson, the third judge.

Interviewing the winner he said, "I have already refused an offer from Warner Bros. and also an offer to serve a life-time term in His Majesty's Forces with my previous rank (L.A.C.), just so I can be at the Skule dinner and we still have a few tickets left for this great dinner."

His partner, lovely Virginia Fox, commented, "Mike is in a class by himself. He has the most distinguished legs I've ever seen."

The contest being over, the group regained their positions near the fire and waited for the 734 chefs to prepare the delicious refreshments of hot-dogs and coffee. The snack seemed to be enjoyed by all and the hot-dogs and coffee disappeared fast.

Having satisfied their hunger, a sing-song was started again and songs, old and new, sad and gay, blue and funny were sung by the party. These melodies were accompanied by harmonicas and toy flutes, played by members of the group.

The party kept up till a little after midnight when everyone was ready for home. The bus returned the residents to their Residence and then took the Toronto girls to their home in Toronto. The girls from Oshawa, Whitby and nearby places went home in taxis.

A very enjoyable evening was had by all who were present and more social functions are being planned by the committee.

Thanks goes to Ken Oakley, Roy Clark, Ron Miles, Mike Stefanyshyn and other members of the social committee who were responsible for the splendid evening.

Bus Times

There will be buses leaving today for Toronto at the following times: 1:30 p.m.; 4:15 p.m.; 5:15 p.m.; and 6:15 p.m.

The buses will leave Toronto for Ajax on Monday night from 10:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.

Aero Men Prepare for Take-off

DAN CHMARA

Have you noticed that persistent droning sound in the evenings lately? It starts about the time that the last baseball game on No. 1 diamond ends and usually continues until the last trace of red sky has disappeared. Occasionally, however, the sound ends suddenly in a faint thud. No, those are not the first waves of Ajax mosquitoes advancing under cover of darkness. It is the Hart House Model Aeroplane Club testing their latest brain child or relaxing from Chem. and Calc by flying their U-control models.

The club was planned earlier in the year but most of its activity has taken place since the beginning of the second term. Hart House Ajax, which sponsors this club, has given the members the use of the building which is north-west of the 'Rec Hall and has had a work bench installed along the entire north wall. The boys are well supplied with tools of their own including an electric hand tool with an assortment of bits attachments. They are dreaming now of some day owning a drill-press and really turning out those models.

There are no regular nights for meetings but each member has a key and can work on his model whenever he has some spare time. Most of the boys work at the club house after classes until dinner because this arrangement interferes least with their study time-tables. The club now has eight active members each one of whom is working on a gas-powered, U-control job. There are no fields near the University campus which are suitable for flying free-flight models, but the hard level surface of the number 1 diamond which is behind Arbor Lodge is made to order for flying U-control aeroplane models. The few test flights which have taken place already have attracted many Ajax engineers and without a doubt, the Aero Club will soon have many of the men model aeroplane-minded.

The club has made a business arrangement with a model supply store in Toronto so that its members can now purchase their supplies at a 15 percent reduction in price by showing their club membership cards.

When your reporter recently visited the club-house, there were several models nearing completion and which will soon be whizzing around the ball field. Some of these models are originals containing new ideas of their builders—ideas which have resulted from dozens of disappointing crashes. These new changes will be tested on our ball fields sometime in the near future. So remember, dear reader, when you hear that droning sound again, don't run for the Flit gun. Run over to the field behind Arbor Lodge and watch the Aero Club put their latest products through their paces.

Snapshot Contest Prize Winning Pick

About 75 snapshots were entered in the Camera Club Contest sponsored by Hart House Ajax. The majority of the entries were taken around the Ajax campus and depicted Ajax life. Two of the prize winning entries are reproduced elsewhere in this issue.

The first prize of $5, was won by Jack Clark, Residence 733, Civils, for his "Embryo Engineer."

The third prize of $1, was won by W. J. Mosley, Residence 724.

The Varsity will show 3 other prize winning pictures in next week's issue on Wednesday.

In the process of reproduction, in half-tone, much of the pictures were lost, but these pictures will soon be displayed in Hart House Common Room where they may be examined at leisure.

Seeing Green?

It seems that the Green Hornet has returned. For the past month she has not appeared on the Ajax run. Now, with a new glistening coat of green paint, her image stands in the parking lot.

But this is not the real Green Hornet. It is her sister craft, the "Grey Hornet" or "Grey Goose." The bus now belongs to the university. No definite plans for it have been made yet. Like the "cattle cars" it has no license and will not be able to leave Ajax property unless one is obtained.

The fate of the true Green Hornet is not known. Probably she was returned to Canada Coach, from which the Grey Coach leased her. Her sister will now carry on her name, but (we hope) not her tradition.

Rex Battle To Give Concert At Ajax

Next Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. the Hart House Ajax Arts Committee will present the second in a series of concerts to be given in the Music Room. The opening concert and first of the series was given by Sir Ernest Macmillan and Elie Spivak, Wednesday, May 22.

These are being given to give Ajax students and staff the opportunity to hear good music. The Committee has been particularly fortunate in having Rex Battle, famous Canadian musician, accept the invitation to give this concert.

Rex Battle was born in London, England, on Shaftesbury Ave., just three blocks from Piccadilly Circus. Before he reached the age of 10, it was obvious that he was a child prodigy, having a remarkable piano technique. After the 1914-18 war he came to Canada and settled in Montreal. He established a name for himself in that city but did not acquire his national popularity until he came to Toronto to play at the Royal York, when that hotel was opened. His broadcasts from that point brought him into many Canadian homes, however it is an accepted fact that Mr. Battle did not have to wait for radio to win distinction.

He has made a successful concert tour of Australia and he has toured Canada searching for new musical talent for his "Singing Stars of Tomorrow" programme heard weekly over one of the major local stations.

In the early summer of 1939 he made tentative arrangements to give a series of recitals in England under Royal Patronage. But the outbreak of war forced a cancellation of this tour. From 1937 to 1942 he studied in New York under Morris Rosenthal who was a pupil of Liszt. In 1941 he gave a Town Hall Recital. Mr. Battle enjoys great popularity throughout the Dominion having just completed a series of bi-weekly radio programmes in addition to his Sunday programme.

In a special interview to "The Varsity" Mr. Battle gave a short account of the "Singing Stars of Tomorrow" programme. In several audition centres throughout Canada young girls, no older than 25 years of age, are judged and those with sufficient talent are put on the programme. They are then given marks according to ability and at the end of the season the girl with the most marks wins $1,000, the next highest $500 and the third gets $250. One girl who has appeared on this programme is now singing grand opera with the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York.

Mr. Battle's programme next Tuesday will consist of a serious part and a lighter part. The first part will consist of "Prelude and Fugue in B"—Bach (as transcribed for piano by Busoni); "Moonlight Sonata"—Beethoven; "Mazurka in A Flat"; "Waltz in E Minor"; "2 Preludes"; "Nocturne in F Sharp"; and "Waltz in A Flat" all by Chopin.

After a 10 minute intermission he will play "Prelude in G"—Bachmanoff; "Intermezzo in B Flat Minor"—Brahms; a Prelude entitled "General Lavine" (eccentric)—Debussy; "Jeux d'eau"—Ravelle; and "Mephisto Valse"—Liszt.

After this Mr. Battle will improvise on themes suggested by the audience. This will be a most unusual demonstration of his skill—the same feat has won him great acclaim during concert tours.

He will also do what he calls "an experiment in style" using a popular song such as "Blue Skies" and showing how it would have been done by Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy and Liszt.

Rex Battle is the type of person who is not above or below the audience; he plays to them and for them and he enjoys instilling "a spot of fun" into his programmes.

S.A.C. NOTES

NEW HOURS FOR ADVISORY BUREAU

Some of the Ex-Service Students have expressed difficulty in getting to the Advisory Bureau during its present hours. In answer to this difficulty new hours have been arranged. Effective next week, the office will be open on Tuesdays from 12 noon until 6:30 p.m. On Thursday afternoon the hours will remain 1:30 to 5:15.

Chapel Notes

There will be a Service at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, and Holy Communion will be celebrated either at or after it, depending upon the numbers present.

The special Whit Sunday Service announced previously will be modified due to the holiday week-end. Padre Candy, who was to have come as preacher, will postpone his visit.

In the event of their being a sufficient number to warrant having the Service in the Music Room, the music will include Brahms' "How Lovely is Thy Dwelling Place," and Bach's "Fantasia and Fugue in G Minor."

There will not be a Communion Service at 8:30.

Templeton Speaks At Musical Event

Last night the Inter Varsity Christian Fellowship held a meeting in the Music Room, Hart House.

A choral group from The Youth For Christ Movement in Toronto were guests of the Ajax V.C.F. The Reverend C. B. "Chuck" Templeton of The Avenue Road Presbyterian Church in Toronto presided over the meeting. Rev. Templeton is also the leader of the Youth For Christ Movement in Toronto. The sixty odd members of the audience who were made up from university students and villagers applauded enthusiastically the girls, who were accompanied by a young pianist as they sang such songs as "Swing Low Sweet Chariot," "Roll Jordan Roll" and concluded their part of the musical evening with "The Lord's Prayer". The trumpet trio composed of Tom Webb, Julie Reynolds and Jack Chellow played Send The Light, Dwelling in Beulahland and The Fight Is On. Gus and Jeanie sang duets "I'm Satisfied With Jesus", "For all My Sins", "You'd better run," (a negro spiritual) and "The Lord Gave Me Song."

The pianist, Ted Smith accompanied the vocalist and the trumpeters as well as playing a few solos. Ted Smith arranges all the musical selections himself.

Rev. Templeton spoke in a humorous as well as serious vein and concluded the evening with a little contemplation on current world problems. He spoke of how in the days of Christ, the people looked to Him for the solution of their problems, but today when we have many greater and more serious problems we search for the solutions in the minds of men and ask nothing of God. Mrs. Templeton spoke a few words in Spanish and then translated them afterwards. The essence of which was how she found salvation in Christ's teachings and how pleased she was with Christian Youth Movements. The meeting was closed with personal contemplation of individual problems.

ALIS IN AJAXLAND

INSTALLMENT 5

During the past few weeks, there has been no mention of Alistair Bannister in this lowly column. I believe that this fact has caused no particular alarm or annoyance among members of the student body.

HOWEVER, if you will recall, the said Mr. Bannister had not yet attained his goal, namely to reach Ajax, and make it his home. According to the title, that is what this story is about, in case you two readers have been wondering.

As time went on, the opening day of Ajax drew closer and closer. Christmas passed very pleasantly for Alis, his many friends giving him all the nice, dainty things he would need at Ajax.

Among other things, he got several pairs of small white cubical objects with spots on the outside and various weights on the inside. At first his parents were mildly curious, but then he explained to them that was the approved method of finding whether a blanket or table was level or not.

He spent New Year's eve "quietly." He spent New Year's day in bed. He was spent.

The following Sunday he was able to open his eyes again, and the doc told him if he tried breathing for a while, he would soon be ready to go to Ajax.

On the fateful day, Alistair Stair-lister woke with expectations and got up with alacrity. He had not a care in the world. His transportation problem was settled long beforehand by arranging for the RTC to pick him up at the corner. From the end of the carline he was to ride on the back of a certain green vehicle now extinct with instructions to drag his foot if it got out of control.

He arrived in Ajax on that Monday morning just in time to see the early birds being herded into the cafeteria for the noonday meal. He inquired in the head tent where to go. They told him where to go. He remarked later that the lake was rather cold at that time of year.

His residence was in great shape. The workmen were just putting in the interior partition, while others were lined up outside with what appeared to be furniture. "Gee," thought Alis, "I wonder if we're going to have beds, too?" And sure enough, there were the soap boxes and cedar branches.

That afternoon he went on a tour conducted by a group of men to show the boys around the southern area (The deep south, that is). They assembled in a large building that had, according to a sign, 313 rooms in it.

Alis's group was led by a meek little man who started out bravely explaining the points of interest. But soon the maze of passageways proved too much for him. He broke down and cried and admitted that they were hopelessly lost.

Alis took command of the situation at once. (He would have taken more, only there were fifty of them to one of him). Quickly taking his thumb from his mouth, he thrust it into the air. Immediately it became dry on one side.

"What does that prove?" asked one of his companions. Alis thought a bit and then replied, "It means there's a ventilating fan right behind me." And then the awful truth dawned. Hydrogen sulphide gas was coming from the fan!

What will happen to our hero? Are they near the Chem. Labs? Whose mistake was that? Will Dalton's law hold? Your chemistry demmy will be glad to tell you, if you ask him nicely.

So long now,
JOE.

CORRECTION

The fifth instalment of Residence Dues, which became due on Tuesday, was NOT the final instalment. There is one more instalment which will become due about July 4. We are sorry that a mistake was made in last Tuesday's issue and hope that this will correct any wrong impressions.

Satisfaction ... Superiority

Thomas Hardy states in 'The Return of the Native' that "The more I see of life, the more do I perceive that there is nothing particularly great in its greatest walks and nothing particularly small in its least."

Not all of the world's -atisfaction is to be derived from an existence of prestige and affluence.

A relatively 'little guy' named Robson drove his six-cylinder racer 830 miles of racing and thousands of miles practicing before he put together the 500 miles which won him the Indianapolis Speedway Classic by a mere 45 seconds last week. He knew satisfaction!

His chief mechanic had only two hours sleep each night during the eight days preceding the race, for tuning up the car was his whole being. When that same car came roaring past the checkered flag and around past the cheering throng in the grandstand to coast into the winner's pit, he too, knew satisfaction.

The man who built that car nearly ten years ago had hoped to drive it in the race himself, but Lady Luck said 'no'. However, he knew satisfaction when he shook hands with his winning driver—even though he did it from a wheel-chair.

None of these men will likely appear in "Who's Who," but probably few of those who do will know any greater satisfaction.

You many who have seen service know that there were those, during the war, who refused advancement and even commission. These were the men who do not ascribe to prestige but are content that it will be said of them, however insignificant their task, that theirs was a job well done.

In soliciting tenders for the purchase of one of his factories, a Northern Ontario citizen was agreeably surprised recently when the foreman of the large plant sincerely asked that the employees be allowed to purchase the factory themselves. In admiration and understanding of their industry, the owner completed the sale, regardless of the fact that the employees were only able to scrape together 80 per cent of the anticipated price.

And probably no greater example exists than in the Ajax Division itself. Even before the students arrived, a miracle of accomplishment was achieved in the Jekyll-Hyde transformation of 'a factory of destruction to one of instruction'. Since January, no less incredible a feat of confidence but understanding leadership has made Ajax an instrumental and fraternal member of the U. of T. family.

In this day of strained relations between the man who owns and runs the factory and the men who work in it, it is for you who are realizing the advantage of a university education to observe and foresee. For it is you who will be the future executive and owners of the industries of Canada and the world. It is you, therefore, who must realize the flesh-and-blood humanness of those who work for you.

For it is a logical and noteworthy converse, that however great followers are moulded by great leaders, a great leader is only the result of followers who are successful and —satisfied. E.G.C.

Art, Music and Drama

The Promenade

The fifth of this year's series of Prom concerts was presented to some five or six thousand persons in Varsity Arena this past Tuesday night. Although a large number of persons were unavoidably delayed by a fire on the Danforth, the extra-mural noises were not nearly as distracting as is usually the case. Mr. Johnson, Manager of the Promenade Concerts, announced the fire over the P.A. system and asked Dr. Wiessman to wait a few minutes after the first number in order that the late-comers might be seated.

The programme was most enjoyable and delightfully arranged. First number of the evening was "Wotan's Farewell" and the "Magic Fire Music" from Wagner's "Die Walkure" followed by Cavalcade from Romeo and Juliette by Zandonai, who is said to be living in Italy at the present time. In both these numbers all sections of the orchestra were in extremely good form.

The next orchestral presentation was "The Enchanted Lake" by Liadow, which was substituted for Debussy's "L'apre Midi d'une Faun" by popular request of patrons of the Prom. The announcement of this substitution over the P.A. brought forth a burst of protesting groans, but the audience was reassured that after hearing the "Enchanted Lake" they would not be sorry about the substitution. ARROWSMITH

The International Cinema (on Yonge Street just below Eglinton) this week is presenting a revival of a show that won loud acclaim when it was originally shown. Those of you that shy away from revivals need have no fears of this one. Although it was produced some time ago the story is still timely and you can neither see nor hear any difference in the actual film as compared with one produced today.

The story opens with various scenes showing Martin Arrowsmith being told by different scientists of the work and study required before he can become a research scientist as per his ambition. He goes to school and studies long years, finally graduating a doctor (of medicine). He is next seen inquiring directions of a nurse scrubbing floors in one of New York's hospitals. After a short argument with her he invites her out to dinner and then tells her she is going to marry him. They do get married and young Dr. Arrowsmith discovers that you can't support a wife on the pay of a research scientist.

He decides to practice medicine as a country doctor, and his wife, Leora, persuades him to go to her home town where the need for a doctor is great. Wheatsylvania is the name of the little Dakotan town where they set up their home. How Martin gets financial support from Leora's father, and then starts up a practice (slowly at first) goes to make up an interesting part of the story full of subtle but good humour, and a great deal of human philosophy.

He hears a Swedish doctor, Sordelius, lecture on his trips into the Orient etc., combating plagues etc. Then and there Arrowsmith decides that even if he doesn't live royally he must go to New York and work in research so that, although he won't go to the Orient, he too will make his contribution to society.

He appears in New York with ever-faithful Leora. They go to one of the country's greatest Labs where Dr. Gottlieb, Arrowsmith's old teacher and friend, has arranged a position for him.

Here, in the McGurk Laboratories, Martin Arrowsmith settles down to discover some sort of anti-bubonic serum. After two years of fruitless work he finally gets something. He realizes that it is of some importance but like the true scientist he is he will not commit himself. However the director of the Lab gets wind of the story and gives it to the papers and it appears in greatly exaggerated form. This is all the more embarrassing when they discover that some French doctor, working at the Louis Pasteur Institute in Paris, has discovered the same thing only a few days previous to Arrowsmith.

Arrowsmith, enraged at the director, then goes to the West Indies to work with Sordelius to find out if his serum will work against the Bubonic Plague which is wreaking havoc there.

The rest of the story is devoted to his work in the Indies, and his marital and medical successes and failures. It is a very good picture with a very definite appeal to engineers. Many of the philosophies of research apply equally to the field of engineering.

The cast includes Ronald Coleman in the title role, Helen Hayes

Speaking of Sport-Sex Life At Ajax

Now that that is covered we shall look into Track and Field, past and future.

The good old days of the early 70's the University (our Annex) gave great publicity and interest to field events. The games were played during a half holiday on the "Lawn" but in 1891 the "Lawn" was considered inadequate for the ever increasing field days. The events in that year were held at Rosedale Park where they attracted over 2000 spectators. The need for some sort of University sports ground due to the addition of St. Michael's, Trinity and Victoria, was obvious so in 1896 a temporary field with grandstand was erected. Due to the increasing interest in sports and advancement of inter-collegiate rugby a stand and bleachers were erected in 1911 to seat 1100 spectators. Since then, the University has held all sports events there and inter-collegiate games.

Out of fifteen events, Varsity has set ten records in inter-collegiate track and field. The following are records set in Inter-Collegiate Track and Field up to 1940: 100-Yard Run—10 seconds; 880 Yards—1 min. 57.2 secs.; Broad Jump—23 ft. 9.5 ins.; Pole Vault—12 ft. 3.25 ins.; 16-lb. Hammer—129 ft.; One Mile Run—4 mins. 30 secs.; 220-Yard Run—2.1 secs.; Shot-Put—41 ft. 8.25 ins.; High Jump—6 ft. 0.25 in.; 120 Yards High Hurdle—14.6 secs.; 440-Yard Run—49.8 secs.; Discus—126 ft. 7.25 ins.; Relay Race, 1 Mile—3 mins. 24.6 secs.; Three-Mile Run—15 mins. 12.6 secs.; Javelin—193 ft. 5.5 ins.; 220-Yard Low Hurdles—24.3 secs.

The Harrier Race or Cross Country Inter-Collegiate Race was inaugurated in 1909 by H. R. Little B.Sc. who presented The Little Cup. The course is between five and seven miles long. The cup has been won 17 times by Toronto, nine times by McGill and once by The Royal Military Academy. So, gentlemen and scholars, next year may see a few records and cups brought to the University by way of Ajax. Ross Ferguson Out To Capture Honours

Ross Ferguson is a short happy fellow who packs a big wallop behind those long hairy legs. Yesterday I clocked "Fergy" for the mile at 4 mins. 58 secs. When interviewed Ross said that it was his first time out in two years. Ross was one of North Toronto Collegiate's best long distance runners. If Ross can do a mile in that time without practice, we are expecting great things from him in the future. The best time that Ferguson has made was in Sweden with an American running team. In Oslo he scudded over the mile in four minutes, forty seconds.

Rugby Practice Continues
Every Tuesday and Thursday is Rugby Practice. Come on out Navy, Army and "Junior Service" rugby champs, and where are the high school players like Bois Ouzunoff, etc.? Golf Tournament
The Ajax Golf Tournament will take place June 13 at The Oshawa Golf Club. The first foursome will tee-off at 1500 hours and thereafter each five minutes. Each team will consist of a maximum of six men, competing four. The four lowest scores to count as the team's final score. The team entries must be in by June 11. See your House Reps. now. The usual green fees will be required. Transportation will be arranged. House Reps will notify The Athletic Office of the men playing and the hours available.

Waves, Wieners Add Zip To Party

Last Wednesday night the girls of 721 staged a wiener roast on the sands of Pickering Beach.

The warm spring night with its canopy of bright stars and the music from the waves of Lake Ontario provided a perfect setting for the occasion.

A large roaring bonfire built on the sands provided the calories necessary for boiling the water in which the wieners were cooked. Raisin squares from Hart House Tuck Shop supplied the vitamins necessary to balance the diet while cokes were provided to wash down the solid matter.

A few friends from the other residences were invited and the party, after gathering at the residence traversed the two and a half miles (so we are told) to the lake on "Shank's Ponies".

Once there however, with a blazing fire for comfort their enthusiasm warmed and they enjoyed themselves sitting about, eating the lunch, and having a sociable time.

"It was a splendid time," said Jim Folwell, popular Assistant to Buff Horton, one of the lucky ones to receive an invitation.

"A swell show," remarked Don Black as he smilingly reminisced.

FISH LAY IN THE BAY

From reports it seems that Frenchman's Bay and vicinity is the home of a number of large granddaddy pikes. Today two thirty-inch babies were removed from their native haunts.

Ardent fishermen will soon learn that the warm weather ruins the fish in the shallow waters, it is said.

We wonder just for what sport they were awarded and to what residence.—721?

But surely it does not require that many buckets of water to keep clean does it?

certainly is a beautiful number, of a mood similar to that of the "L'apre Midi d'une Faun," and its reception by the audience bore out the announcer's prediction.

A symphonic Poem, "The Moldau," was very well performed and its enchanting melody certainly won the approval of the audience. It is descriptive of the course of the Bohemian river, the Moldau. Written by Smetana under interesting circumstances.

The rendition of Richard Strauss' "Salome's Dance" was commendable and certainly won the approval of the audience with its opening crescendos, snake-like rhythmic descriptive passages and measured phrases. Once, during this number, the French horns seemed to be a trifle below their usual excellence but they certainly redeemed themselves a little later in the number—it was here that the trombones were outstanding.

Overture to "The Gypsy Baron" by Johann Strauss was very well received. With its slow, almost frustrative introduction, it finally rose to the beautiful consuming rhythm of the familiar Strauss Waltz. The clarinets were very good during this piece.

The orchestral encore demanded by a cheering crowd was no profound symphonic selection. Rather it was a martial air, "The Caissons Go Rolling Along." The power of the percussion section in this work was tremendous, and won hearty applause, recalling Dr. Wiessman to give a second reading of the same number (apparently the only one he had prepared as an encore).

It was most annoying to have a large part of the audience get up and walk out at the end of the first encore. This must give the conductor a very poor opinion of Toronto audiences and their appreciation of music. It would seem that more appreciation and consideration is due to those who want to hear the encores and to such a fine musical organization presenting good music at such a low cost. No wonder Canada's talent goes south.

Dr. Frieder Wiessman was a great success, conducting his second concert this season with the Philharmonic. Again he conducted a large portion of the programme from memory. He conducts with a verve and feeling that demands and gets the very best from the orchestra. He has very good control over all the sections of the orchestra and the only criticism of his conducting would be that for a brief moment he tended to "drown out" Miss Merriman.

Red-headed Nan Merriman has a classical beauty and appealing personality, which together with her beautiful rich voice, won the hearts of the audience. Her voice reached all corners of the arena, even during the quieter selections. Her manner, artistry and appearance were superb. She appeared in a mauve chiffon dress colourfully bedecked with glistening sequins.

Her rendition of "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix" (Saint-Saens) was lovely earned whole-hearted applause that must have pleased her. Her next three selections were all of the light gay novelty type. "I Hate Music" with its comical list of reasons why the singer hates music but loves singing. "B for Barney" a very short Belfast Street song with a surprising ending—she said "It was the first song I ever learned and it took a long time." Then came "Look Edwin" with the ending lines "See the boy in the striped pants, He was born in Paris France" which amused a happy audience. For an encore she sang "The Yellow Dog" followed in a serious mood by "Ave Marie" to which an enraptured audience gave a thunderous ovation.

During the broadcast portion of the programme Miss Merriman sang "Connais-tu le pays?" and "Me voici dans son boudoir" both from Thomas' Mignon—both of these superbly sung, well received.

Giving an exclusive interview for The Varsity, Miss Merriman expressed a keen interest in the Ajax Division of the University of Toronto and when she learned that 80 per cent of the student body is composed of veterans she was quite pleased to hear that such educational opportunities were being offered to this country's ex-servicemen. She went on to say "Please give them all my very best wishes.

Thanks A MILLION

Miss Merriman is very vivacious, likes Toronto although she had only been in the city one day at the time of the interview. Later on this year she will return to Canada to give a concert in Montreal. She intends to stay there one week to do some sight-seeing. This summer she is going to tour Western Canada.

We return the salutation Miss Merriman and wish you well-deserved distinction even greater than that which you enjoy today.

Next Tuesday evening 17-year-old Patricia Travers comes to the Prom. She is a phenomenal young violinist with an amazing musical history too long to give here. One outstanding instance is that at the age of twelve she was chosen to give the premiere of the Prokofeff Second Concerto with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Tuesday night she will play Caprice Basque—Sarasate; Ave Maria—Schubert; Scherzo Tarantelle—Wieniawski; and Concerto No. 1 in G Minor, Op 26—Bruch.

On the same programme the Toronto Philharmonic will play the Overture to "Russia and Ludmila"—Glinka; Three Pieces for Strings—Purcell; "Artist's Life"—J. Strauss; Roman Carnival—Berlioz; and the finale to Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4. D. B. JOLLY

Newman Club

On Tuesday evening at 7.00 p.m. in the Music Room of Hart House the Newman Club had its monthly meeting under the direction of its senior members and with the guidance of Fr. Kyte. The meeting was to be the last meeting of the school year but the members present decided to hold one more on Tuesday the 18th of June.

The last meeting was more or less successful and although all the members were not out considerable of the clubs functions were gotten over. When the meeting started the first thing to be discussed was the outside interests such as hiking and sports. Next on the program was a debate which did not come about because the debating team did not get fully prepared.

Finally the more serious part of the evening came and two or three of the members gave short talks on various parts of Catholic Doctrine and this was followed by questions from the rest of the members concerning these questions. The meeting closed with a short prayer.

Informality Is Keynote Of Promenade Violinist

(By D. B. Jolly)

Monday afternoon your reporter entered the King Edward Hotel, spoke a few words on the house telephone and moments later was whisked to the 14th floor and ushered into a press conference! This interview was to be even more important than that. Your reporter was to interview a GIRL! Now a girl is something strange to an Ajaxian, but when she is a pretty young lady in her late teens, a comely brunette with an attractive personality an engineer is bound to be favorably impressed. Add to these facts that the young lady is a star of stage, screen and radio, of international fame, well you can appreciate the situation.

The girl—Patricia Travers, sensational young violinist who was in Toronto to play as soloist with the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra at the Prom last night.

Miss Travers lives in her birthplace Clifton, New Jersey, a suburb of New York about 17 miles west of Manhattan. Although she has spent a large part of her young life on concert tour she has maintained an educational standing equivalent to any girl of her age. Unlike most child stars she has never had a tutor but she kept up the work herself. She has written the "city examinations" along with the other students (these are the examinations set by the supervisor of public schools as opposed to those in a private school) and has graduated from High School. However she does not contemplate entering College as she has definitely decided that music will be her career. This is not to be wondered at considering the astounding success she has already had.

Questioned about the statement in last week's Programme Notes that she began to play the violin at the age of 4 Miss Travers replied that she was given a "quarter-size" violin for a Christmas present at the age of 3½ and from then on she devoted more and more time to the study of the violin.

She gave her first performance in public at the age of 6 at Music Mountain in Connecticut, but her real official debut was on the Ford Sunday Evening Hour at the age of nine. When she was thirteen she was chosen to give the premier of the Prokofiev Second Concerto with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Now at the age of seventeen she has performed with 34 of the major Symphonic Orchestras in the U.S.A. and Canada. In Canada she has performed in St. Catharines, Sarnia, North Bay and Toronto but never in Eastern or Western Ontario. She likes Toronto and Ontario very much although her trip to North Bay was in the winter and she found it just a trifle cold. She thinks Torontonians are kind and very friendly.

When told that there are only 8 girls at Ajax she was rather envious and expressed the opinion that "they must have a wonderful time".

Referring to the lighter type of music she said that she is very partial to South American music and that George Gershwin is one of her favourite composers. She thinks his music is outstanding and that had he not died so young he would have, in all probability, written very good music for instruments other than the piano, such as violin. She definitely does not swoon when Frankie sings but nevertheless

Musical Strains To Aid Digestion

Last night an amplifier system was installed in the cafeteria by the Engineering Society. It will provide music during meal times and will be used for important announcements.

Purchased from Western Electric, the fifty-watt system has six speakers, a record player, microphone, and a radio. It will be in use this evening for the Skule Dinner.

The committee which installed the amplifier was under the direction of Ted Hodgson, former radar officer, (R.C.A.F.), aided by Al Huestis, another member of the Engineering Society.

The Society, in planning the installation, decided that announcements would not be appreciated during meals and therefore a policy was laid down that only notices of the utmost importance to all would be broadcast. Anyone having a notice of interest is required to take it to the Engineering Society Store.

The Society has a small collection of records and they will supplement them with radio programs.

She has a great deal of respect for him both as an individual and as a singer.

For hobbies Miss Travers reads a great deal and in summer she goes for hikes and bicycle rides.

Miss Travers in addition to being a star of the concert stage and radio, has spent some 18 weeks in Hollywood making a film for Paramount entitled "There's Magic in Music".

She has a very appealing personality and a very friendly attitude. She was most helpful when your reporter ran into difficulties pronouncing such names as Novacek and Prokofieff.

Miss Travers and her parents leave Toronto by train today to return to their home. On the 22nd of this month Miss Travers will appear in Cleveland. She likes to travel by plane and would have come to Toronto in that manner had her reservations not been cancelled at the last minute.

Miss Travers appeared as soloist at the Prom last night and for further details read the Art, Music and Drama column in this Friday's Varsity.

Ajax Elections Jokes! Jokes!

Nominations for the offices or the executive of the Class of '46 must be turned into the Engineering Society Stores on Friday, June 21st. Nomination forms will be obtainable at the Stores after next Monday.

Election speeches will be made in the Recreation Hall on June 25th and the election will be held on Wednesday, June 26th.

The class is to elect a President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Athletic Representative. The President will be a member of the Engineering Society Executive.

Club Chairmen and the executive of the first year will be elected next October.

The year executive will organize Year Dances, and will administer funds for sports and incidental class business. This year the Engineering Society has had to handle all business of the sort but as the various organizations on the campus increase it has become necessary to form other groups in order to co-ordinate all activities.

OCE Prof. Appointed To Math Methods

President Sidney Smith announces that Peter Arnold Petrie, B.A., B. Paed., has been appointed Assistant Professor of Methods in Mathematics in the Ontario College of Education. Professor Petrie was born near Seaford in the County of Huron in 1897 and attended the Clinton Collegiate Institute for his secondary school education. He then enrolled in University College, University of Toronto, from which he graduated in the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1921, after completion of the Honour Course in Mathematics and Physics. For two years Professor Petrie was engaged in research work in Physics in the University of Toronto and he then proceeded to take his professional certificate from the Ontario College of Education. In 1922 he was appointed to the staff of the Central Technical School; obtained the degree of Bachelor of Pedagogy from the University of Toronto in 1924; and in April, 1928 was appointed Head of the Department of Mathematics in the Central Technical School. In November of that year he was appointed to the staff of the University of Toronto Schools as Instructor in Mathematics, a position he has held until his present appointment. During the war, Professor Petrie was an Instructor in Mathematics for Canadian Legion Educational Services.

Humid Hustlers Hail Harmonious Handling

Eminent Pianist Gives Recital

Last night in the music room of Hart House a near-capacity crowd attended a recital given by Rex Battle. This was the second in a series of concerts sponsored by the Hart House Arts Committee featuring eminent Canadian musicians.

Mr. Battle, although labouring under difficulties such as stifling heat and various external noises, presented a program that was enjoyed immensely by all. Starting off rather stiffly, his selections showed widely varying mood and tempo, and it was not long before the soloist and the audience in general caught the spirit of informality, which typifies Ajax recitals.

Perhaps the best received selection was number 8 on the programme, Liszt's Mephisto Valse. Mr. Battle confided afterwards that it is "Quite a handful to play." However big a handful it may have seemed to him, to the audience it was well within his capabilities, and was handled masterfully.

Mr. Battle opened his well chosen program with a prelude and Fugue in D written by Bach and arranged for piano by Busoni. It is a melodious composition and the treatment accorded it was suitably smooth and flowing.

Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata came next and was well received. Then he played a group of Chopin, including the Mazurka in A Flat, Waltz in E minor, Two short Preludes, Nocturne in F sharp, and the Waltz in A flat.

Following a ten minute intermission, Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor was well and simply played. Then came Brahms' gentle Intermezzo, and Debussy's Prelude in C major (Eccentric). In which the composer pokes fun musically at an eccentric old general who forgets his dignity for a moment and gives a pretty girl the old eye. It is a novel tune and was played in a novel manner.

Jeux d'eau by Ravel is a fantasy inspired by the sight of a fountain depicting the God of Rain, and is supposed to represent what might be heard if the statue suddenly came to life and jumped into the surrounding pool, and, according to Ravel, be "Ticked by the water" causing him to laugh.

Mephisto Valse would have been the end of the programme but the volumes of heartfelt applause decreed otherwise. Going out on a precarious limb, Mr. Battle asked members of the audience for a C sharp, B flat, G sharp and F natural. He then proceeded to weave these five notes into a melody which was greatly enjoyed by a fascinated audience.

The second encore was an attempt to show how the song "Blue Skies" by Irving Berlin would have sounded had it been written by such composers as Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy and Liszt. The curious variations peculiar to those masters all seemed to fit remarkably well to Berlin's melody, and several times surprised laughter came forth.

The last encore was a South American tune by Frederico Longas called Bolero Ornitico, a tuneful little ditty which served admirably to close the programme.

After the program a lunch was served in the library in Hart House which gave a number opportunity for meeting Mr. Battle.

CAFETERIA ANNOUNCEMENT
Dinner will be served tomorrow night from 5:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. for those who do NOT wish to attend the SKULE DINNER.

Those who are attending the dinner are requested to be seated by 7:00 p.m. The dinner will not be served Cafeteria Style.

OBITUARY NOTICE
It is with deep regret and profound sorrow that we mourn the passing of that colourful character, Alistair Bannister. The author, whom we all know and love, was quietly surrounded late last night by several members of the student body, and set adrift in Frenchman's bay in a small boat with only a copy of "Pete Philpott's Sailing Guide" to steer by. He was last seen in the general direction of New Orleans.

For The Ajaxeneer—All Types Of Books Here

By ED SOKOLOWSKI

The students on the Ajax campus cannot complain about the shortage of reading matter. There are three libraries at the students' disposal which carry a large variety of literature. Books dealing with technical subjects, novels, classical books and others can be found in either of the three libraries at Ajax.

In the few square feet that were left after the laundry shop and the now obsolete Winnie's Beauty shop were built, the circulating library can be found. This small area houses over 2000 books ranging from encyclopedias to the present day popular novels.

As this library is not only for the students use, but also for the employees of the University and the villagers of Ajax, a more suitable location was desired. Building 2027, near York Hall, was chosen as the new site for the library because it is more convenient for the commuters, employees, villagers, and also for the students in the West Residence next term. This building, which at present is being made ready for the library to occupy it within the next few weeks, has more shelf space and study room and also plenty of room to move.

The main concern of the library is to have a little bit for everyone, remarked Mr. A. Gray, who with his wife operates the library. When the circulating library first opened it was difficult to decide the type of books the new S.P.S. men preferred and after a few weeks Mr. Gray, a mystery story fan, found, "The students have a more mature choice in the type of books they read than was expected when we first started."

The library now has a large selection of books to satisfy everyone's taste. Technical and reference books, classical and modern novels can be found in the library. Any person who cannot find a book on file are requested to fill in a request sheet and then this book is obtained from the main library in Toronto, if possible.

There is no definite time limit on the loan of books but depending on the popularity of the book a time is set when the book should be returned. All red tape is kept to a minimum in borrowing books by having each member sign the card of the book they wish to take out and drop the card in a box. Although this gives the librarian extra work it does not interfere with the smoothly run library.

This library is not only used for the loan of books but on some evenings a few students get together and have a very informal debate. The debaters have a very enjoyable evening as the library is a splendid source for the information required.

When the library moves to its new location it is hoped that more people will make full use of the privilege offered by the library.

Technical Library
The Technical Library on the campus is situated behind the faculty offices in building 313-A. This library contains books of the technical nature which are used for reference to all subjects taught at the University.

The University of Toronto operates this library for the students benefit, to use the books from this library as much as possible. Miss Ann Adamson is in charge of the Technical library here at Ajax and has a staff of three to help her. They are Marg, McCammon, Gwen Hearnly and Irene Corban. One of these girls will be found at the desk during the hours of opening from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. to answer any queries concerning the books of this library.

There are seven divisions of subjects dealing with technical matter in this library of approximately 500 books. More books are coming in all the time and soon the library will have all the books concerning technical detail. Besides these books, there are a great many periodicals concerning the Engineering field. Thirty different subscriptions of these magazines are available at the library and more are expected. The students should feel free to use these books and periodicals. The books can be taken out over night and over the weekend.

Mr. Gray of the Circulating library co-operates with this library to loan books, etc., that are not at the technical library. If any student does not find the book he is looking for and this book is not in any of the Ajax libraries then it is obtained from the technical library in Toronto.

This library is the largest of the three and also has the best lighting system. It can accommodate nearly 200 students who can be seated at the 25 tables. The ceiling is full of fluorescent lights which gives it the best lighting for reading. Along the walls of this room are posters dealing with Engineering and Architectural matter. Many students take advantage of this library, most of them being architect students.

The third library on the Ajax campus is the Browsing library located in Hart House. The 500 books of this library consist of the latest novels, humor, autobiographies, philosophy, and other type of subjects. Although these books are not allowed out of the room itself, one may read them at any hour of the day.

The idea of this library is to create an interest in reading whenever a person has any time to spare. This library and the Circulating library co-operate together, and the latter attempts to have a copy of all the books in the browsing library. This gives a student a chance to look over a book in the browsing library and if he likes the story he can start the book there and later obtain a copy of it in the circulating library.

Hart House are responsible for this library and K. E. McNaught in Res. 730 is looking after it. An attempt is being made to procure the latest novels as soon as they are published but due to the difficulty the publishers have in supplying the demand, it takes a little time to get all the books that would bring the library completely up to date.

The room has a pleasant atmosphere about it which makes the library an excellent reading and study room and many students have spent their free evenings there.

For Commuters Only

The forgotten few (150 plus 10 for flats). The commuters feel that their aspect of Ajax life has been sadly neglected. For this reason, and no other (believe me), this expose is offered.

Life in residence, from what we have gathered from previous columns, must be, shall we say, a trifle risqué, (French for interesting), so now we offer you the other half, the quiet, unassuming, studious nature-loving souls, the commuters. A cross-sectional view is presented below.

The car, (and I apply the term loosely), is (we believe) a Plymouth 1933 variety, the engine (7) 1934 variety (7½ miles to a gallon!). The cash customers form a galaxy of prospective benefits to humanity. An Eng.-Phys. boy, electrical, chemical, mining and mechanical engineers and a lowly architect who is unrecognized by the others.

The first stop in the morning is for air which happens on the average every 5 or 10 miles. The second start results only in the quiet hum (?) of the engine changing to a sput-sput, a twang and a slow disheartening phiz. Eager, trained minds and capable hands rally to the call. The M.E. lifts the hood; the E.E. counts the spark plugs; the C.E. checks the oil and the unmentionable gazes fondly at the 1st year architectural project on the horizon (a 4 x 4 wooden structure with sloping roof and funnel). By this time some bright person has thought to try the starter and the Eng-Phiz of the car who has just readied himself for action, has to doff his brown suit and we're on our way.

Now to business. The "C.F. boy" has to be elected for the day. One has shaved, one has a clean shirt but Frank has combed his hair (very unusual) and is elected. But now the water tower and smoke stack appear and once more we must expose ourselves to the degrading effects of association with the country people.

At the end of the day we pile into the hack with joyful shouts of "day, ax, magnetic flux, osmosis, cement-mixer putty-putty" and we are off, saluting the passing females in the approved fashion, singing the Ajax song, giving the Ajax yell (words on request). A certain Mr. Wall is passed on his bicycle and three cheers are given, "Hip Hip . . .".

Elections again to the B.N. Club. Jim is elected unanimously when he reports a 37 in Chem lab, the nearest to him being a mere 27. We pass the "Blue-beetle" and all hands fly out the window for the sign of the road. Space does not permit a full historical sketch of this Ajax trade-mark, so I will merely say it is a slight modification of the Girl Guide salute, given in an inverted position. It is so common we feel hurt if it is not returned. There is more to tell of flats, accidents and—no, they wouldn't print that so I'll stop now and remember always—return the sign "Gee Gee".

Scholarships For Jaxsmen

The Ontario Association of Professional Engineers has announced the provision of a fund for the award of three scholarships to first year students in competition at the final examinations in August at Ajax. The scholarships consist of a $100 award, a $75 award and a $50 award. The terms of the awards are the same as those laid down in the Faculty of Applied Science Calendar and will be given to the three students obtaining the highest percentage of the total number of marks allotted to the subjects in their respective courses.

These are the scholarships referred to by Dr. Lord, President of the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers when he spoke to the first year students at Ajax a few weeks ago.

Litterature Canadienne

PART TWO

I believe that it is not always easy to write fair and intelligent reviews of Canadian poetry—or, for that matter, of Canadian prose works—both because of the nature of our literary development to this time, and more particularly, because of the somewhat unfortunate nature of strong external influences. A more firmly established literature than ours has already eased itself into the mythical international culture; has already achieved a certain consistency which, while it must always remain open to individual rebellion, provides a fairly reliable critical touchstone. By virtue of its long history and established merits, any literature of such standing is generally appreciated in the correct context, not only by interested observers in other countries but also, and perhaps even more importantly, by those most closely and directly associated with it.

In Canada, however, there is still a tendency to consider the merits of our poetry almost wholly with respect to the development of distinctly Canadian poetry. A number of not unimportant critics quite obviously consider this attitude to be both good and necessary. And within limits, this is not always an incorrect, or even unduly nationalistic attitude to express. Feeling as I do that Canadian literature is about ready to intrude forcefully on world literature, I also believe that it will succeed only when it establishes itself as a truly Canadian literature, intelligent, perceptive, and so generally applicable to the realities of Canadian life as to be equally sensitive to universal fundamentals.

So long as this quality of Canadian literature remains a fact, however, our critics have the twofold duty of establishing the relation of each new book to our own literature, and also to the vaster international one. It seems to me that lack of understanding of this necessity has led in the past to unduly enthusiastic appreciations of the work of E. J. Pratt, to mention only one example. On the other extreme is a fairly recent American review of "Overture", the collection of F. R. Scott's poems, in which the reviewer contends that "the derivativeness of Scott's verse forms . . . (is) a hindrance to the development of a Canadian poetry. He is in the position of those American poets of pre-Whitman days who labored futilely to write about American experience in the manner of Byron or Tennyson." Now I would certainly object to any tendency to establish a purely derivative Canadian poetry; but I would also suggest that, when we consider the period of Scott's writing, the development of Canadian poetry to that time, and the subject matter of much of his poetry, his solution has behind it much of the force of necessity, and that in fact his possibly meagre achievements formed some basis for the general release and advances of his younger contemporaries.

These younger poets are already demonstrating surprising ability to remain sensitive to the experiments of alien contemporaries, while achieving at the same time a distinctly Canadian poetry. Most interesting of this group are two men, Irving Layton and Patrick Anderson, and a young woman, P. K. Page, who is particularly talented. They find an anchor in the two "little" magazines, Contemporary Verse and Northern Review, and have also been encouraged by the American magazine, Poetry (Chicago). And it is possibly worth noting that these three poets, as well as most others in the same group, are strongly committed to a socially conscious poetry, which still retains its merits as absolute poetic expression.

Anyone interested in Canadian poetry should also pay attention to several poets who, while still writ-

A GREECY PYKNIK...

One rare June morn Eta and Zeta went for a stroll through the alpha alpha fields. Their Gamma had given them a lunch of pi and other goodies. However, she warned them that if they went to the river they were not to go for a rho.

The girls gambolled along like a lamda till they reached the river. There they saw a kitty with a pretty white stripe down its back (Ajax type) but it wouldn't mu so they left it alone (lucky, eh?).

They had just begun their lunch like good little girls when a couple of Jads, Omicron and Epsilon, came along. The boys soon helped them dispose of the pi, etc., and at a loss for something to do (?), suggested a rho on the river. Zeta said they wouldn't go but the boys coaxed, saying, "Will you, won't you, can't I coax you, Aw, come on, you said you would, won't you Gamma let you? So before long, Eta and Zeta, against their beta judgment, agreed.

They were only going to rho to the delta to see if they could find some lillies.

The boat, they borrowed was small, dilapidated, and rather damp. Only a few gunters from shore Zeta yelled, "My theta is getting wet." She started to rise—upsilon they were in the drink. However, Omicron, being a tau boy and the water only three feet deep, became the hero and rescued them.

They built a nice big fire on the shore to dry out and Zeta said with a psi, "This will be a sigma on my name if it ever gets out." However, the boys didn't care one iota—they nu their fun was spoiled.

To make a short story long, poor Eta and Zeta struggled through the alpha alpha again home to Gamma. As soon as Gamma saw them she nu the worst. All she said was "Phi on you, you bad girls—to bed without your supper." So good night.

Hart House Dance Strictly Informal

The dance which is being held in Hart House Toronto on Friday night will be strictly informal.

Among the special guests who will be present are Dr. and Mrs. Sidney Smith, Rev. Carl Swan, Chaplain at Ajax, Professor and Mrs. I. R. Pounder, Professor and Mrs. Bain, and Professor Alcutt. The last three guests are representing the heads of the various departments at Ajax.

Prom Concert Pleases Patrons

Last night the Toronto Philharmonic Orchestra presented one of its best performances. Although the Varsity Arena was uncomfortably warm, a large and enthusiastic audience attended.

The tremendous applause given the orchestra brought forth two encores "The Track" (Strauss) and "The Sabre Dance" (Katcheturian).

Patricia Travers, youthful article gave a fine performance on her violin which is a genuine Stradavarius. Her numbers were enjoyed.

For future programs readers should watch the Hart House Bulletin Board.

ing a good deal of verse, first gained reputations some years ago. Most important members of this group are Dorothy Livesay and A. M. Klein, while Earle Birney is an able and pleasant, if somewhat less interesting and striking, contemporary. All these poets are distinctly Canadian in tone and temper, although they are by no means Canadian in the "romantic northland" sense. And all are equally international in a world that, even for the most personal of poets, is ever growing smaller and more urgently oppressive. —ROBERT WEAVER

Stop the Exodus

It comes as a startling revelation to learn that since Confederation in 1867, over 4,000,000 of Canada's sons and daughters have gone to the United States in search of more brilliant careers than their native land has been able to offer them.

Scientists and doctors, musicians, writers and movie stars, and even nurses have flocked to the land of opportunity.

This figure is staggering when it is realized that it represents one-third of Canada's 12 million population.

It represents to Canada, not only a loss in numbers but also a loss of her best brains, a loss of men with energy and initiative, a loss of men with ideas and who are anxious to see their ideas expressed in the concrete.

This array of manpower and skills; this array of talent might have been used to build up and develop Canada's own natural resources and serve her own people.

These men and women left us because another country valued their talents more highly and recognized their worth by offering to them better positions and better living standards than the country of their birth.

Because there are in Europe more highly trained men of leisure than there are in America or Canada, Europe has led the world in the fields of pure science. In Europe, there existed a class of men whose private incomes were adequate to enable them to devote much of their time to "Natural Philosophy" as a hobby. These "gentlemen scientists" made many valuable contributions to pure science. Many of the laws of science with which we engineers are familiar were discovered by these men. And tomorrow, we will build upon the foundations laid down by them.

For the science of the next generation we need more such men to lay down more foundations.

Wartime has provided a stimulus to scientific research in Canada and now that the war is over, there is the ever-lurking danger that this stimulus will no longer exist and that conditions such as existed in pre-war times will again become prevalent. It is to be hoped that such deplorable tendencies will be averted.

To engineers-in-training comes the reassuring fact that already plans and preparations are being made to provide employment and to have positions available when graduation time comes. Furthermore attempts are being made to raise the standards of remuneration to the point where they are on an equality with those existing in the United States.

In this direction at least, then, an attempt is being made to divert the flow of technical brains into Canadian channels and to stop the exodus of our keenest minds and valuable citizens.

With Canada among the foremost nations in atomic research today, there should be a great demand for scientists, particularly among those specializing in nuclear physics. With the harnessing of atomic energy for peacetime uses there are many problems awaiting solution. Fields as vast as those of our own territories lie waiting to be explored. There is a great challenge for Canada's scientific brains and for those with the means of providing the necessary financial resources. Surely the challenge will not go unheard by Canadians. Surely these men will be provided a comfortable living to enable them to devote their energies to the pursuits of investigation as were the gentlemen scientists able to do.

With our country's generous re-establishment credits many of our best and keenest youth are availing themselves of the opportunities for advancing their technical knowledge and skills. The government has gone to great expense to provide training. When the day comes to reap the fruit of this expensive training it is inconceivable that it will sit idly by while other nations walk in and partake of the fruits. Surely the day has come when at last the country has awakened to the valuable assets it has in its men and women and will succeed in inducing these men and women to remain within her borders.

Speaking of Sport

Golf Thursday

The Intra-Mural Golf Tournament will be held at the Oshawa Golf and Country Club Thursday afternoon. The first foursome will tee-off at 1500 hr., and continue there- after until all participating teams have arrived. A correc- tion for last week's Speaking of Sport is now due. A team will consist of four men with a maximum number of six playing. The four lowest points will constitute the team's final score. Don't forget ALL ENTRIES FOR THE GOLF TOURNAMENT MUST BE IN THE ATHLETIC OFFICE BY NOON TODAY.

Tell your House Rep. the time you will be able to tee- off. Transportation will be provided if needed.

Track and Field

The Inter-Residence Track and Field Meet will take place Wednesday, June 19, at 1800 hrs.

The rules are as follows:

(1) Each entrant will be limited to three events (track or field).

(2) Special events will be contested by entrants NOT participating in track and field events.

(3) Only three entries in each event—per residence will be permitted.

(4) All entry forms are to be completed and turned in to the Athletic Office by Monday, June 17.

The meeting will consist of the following events and not necessarily in this order: 100 yds., 220 yds., 440 yds., 880 yds., 1 mile, 100 yd. relay, 220 yd. relay, the 100 yd., 220, 440 and 880 medley relays, hurdles, shot put, discus, High Jump, Standing Broad Jump, Running Broad Jump, Clothes Change Race, Wheel Barrow Race, Novelty No. 1 and Novelty No. 2.

Sport vs. Food

All today's games are cancelled because of the Engineer- ing Society Banquet.

Archery

Today archery makes its debut on the Ajax Campus. The bull's eye is on the field immediately back of Residence 721. The two bows and two dozen arrows are not just for the girls, which will probably make the most of this op- portunity to take a few pounds off, but are available to all.

The Athletic Association have planned a bang up time for the sports wind up of the year. July fourth is the big day. The presentation of the Dean Young Pennant, the President's Trophy and the Director's Cup will take place at a dinner in the cafeteria at 7:00 p.m.

At 8:30 a show featuring parts of the acts from "The Stop and Go" hit which took Toronto by storm will high- light the occasion. Dorothy Bromby, an up-and-coming young composer, playwright and actress is the backbone of this show. It is hoped that Miss Bromby will be able to make an appearance at this climax to Ajax sports.

Dancing from ten p.m. to one in the morning will be the last organized sport of the University of Toronto, Ajax Div. The residences will have to solve their own women situation as they do with House Dances and may the best man win at the Rec. Hall.

Pick Winners of Varsity Contest

In the cartoon contest which was sponsored by The Varsity and which closed May 31.

The first prize of $5 in the con- test is awarded to Ron Thurston of 722 for his cartoon which we have taken the liberty of naming "A Son of Ajax."

The second prize of $3 was awarded to D. Harling of 736 for his "Night Scene".

The two honourable mention car- toons will bring to their creators the sum of $1 each.

The prize money will be available within the next week and if the artists will call at the S.A.C. Office they will receive their money.

HONORABLE MENTION

Each of the accompanying photographs received honorable mention in the recent snap shot contest sponsored by Hart House, and earned $1 for each of their owners. M. Macdonald submitted the picture of the dog and turtle; K. H. Sullivan, the snow scene; and W. H. Correll the study in shadows.

Ajax Rumblings

FADED?

It seems that the Canadian Army who have been seen about the campus have brought a new game to Ajax. One of our demes seemed to be very interested in the behav- iour of the two cubes which played an important part in the game. (Did you win or lose?)

BELLS FOR JUNIOR

Correspondence

Ajax Ont., June 11, 1946.

Dear Editor:

I am an Ajax man who seldom complains and always attends all the English and Engineering and Society lectures. I have been sweating in silence until now but today was too much for even me. The heat was terrific. I couldn't see Professor Wright for the steam and heat waves rising from sweating Engineers in the first rows. The sweat kept running down my arms and washing the pencil out of my hand. My tie was soaked and on shrinking, nearly choked me.

In spite of these handicaps, no complaint passed my sweating lips, no word from the front was missed by my ears as I listened to Professor Wright.

While we sweated in the stuffy interior of the Rec Hall the breeze outside cooled those who were so fortunate as to be outside. Why, dear Editor, Can we not have lectures outside? The P.A. system could easily be rigged up outside so that we could have our lectures in comfort and enjoy the sun as well. I am sure that Prof. Wright would enjoy these lectures more if this arrangement were tried out.

Please see if you can do anything about this situation. I am sure that most of the students would be in favour of this change as nearly everybody has suffered as I have.

Yours in desperation,

A SKULE MAN.

Liberal Education

(Extract from "STARBEAMS" of the Windsor Daily Star.)

Andrew L. MacKippop (reports the Prince of Prince Road) smiled a smile of complete satisfaction—he had attained a goal which the majority of Canadians claimed impossible.

With a quick flourish of his sensitive fingers, he folded the examination paper.

Excited, elated, almost intoxicated, he left his desk to hand the paper to the presiding professor.

Suddenly, Andrew L. MacKippop stopped.

This would never do, he murmured to himself. He must keep control; at least he must pretend to be calm.

Outwardly nonchalant, yet inwardly a turmoil of suppressed excitement, Andrew L. MacKippop returned to his desk.

He picked up his crib notes and again started for the professor's table.

But even if these notes had been discovered, it would not have detracted from Andrew L. MacKippop's achievement. His greatness was such that the president of the college would have gladly overlooked a little cribbing on the last examination.

As he moved toward the front of the room, he sensed the admiring glances of his fellow students. Some had attempted to do what only he had done, but had failed. Others, the softer, pampered ones, had only scoffed at his ambition.

Yet, now that the strain was almost over, Andrew L. MacKippop knew that all the suffering and all the hardships had not been in vain. His triumph would be long remembered.

And he had been lucky, too.

The Winter had not been too severe, and now an early Spring made him less conspicuous as he walked to school without a topcoat. In February he had felt self-conscious, dressed only in a suit.

It had been much colder, though, the year before in the Stalag in Germany.

But there, with Red Cross parcels, he had eaten, somewhat regularly.

Now, it was small consolation to be told that an empty stomach would keep his mind clear and sharp during the examinations.

The quick sigh of a relieved man escaped Andrew L. MacKippop's lips when he handed the professor his paper.

He turned to leave the room.

The room seemed to turn, too. And kept turning.

Andrew L. MacKippop fainted and fell flat on his face before his classmates.

Thirty minutes later, after his prostrate body had been removed on a stretcher, a veteran-student summed up the situation.

"It took willpower to do what he did."

"Yes," added another. "He's got guts, but malnutrition seems a high price to pay for his success."

"What," inquired the puzzled professor, "what did MacKippop do other than not eat enough and come to class insufficiently dressed?"

"Oh," replied the first veteran, simply, "he lived on the allowance the government gives us to attend school. He refused to touch his gratuities."

"Truly, a brave man," eulogized the professor.

AJAX boasts no ivy-covered towers which are the traditional symbol of the University. Nevertheless its students are just as keen and as eager to learn as those in more artistic surroundings; these men and women are pioneers and therefore need not the stimulus of an academic environment to make them put forth their best effort.

Out at Ajax among the green fields, beside the blue lake and under an azure sky, Ajax engineers pursue the stoney and rugged path which leads to higher learning.

PRESENT HOMES

Looking east from the water tank which towers high above Ajax can be seen the "east area" residences which are now being used by the Ajax students and which are equipped with kitchenettes, laundry facilities, study rooms well lighted with soft fluorescent lighting, and comfortably furnished common rooms where engineers may relax after a hard day of classes.

FUTURE HOMES

Looking west from the water tower lie the "west area" residences which are being converted into comfortable quarters for the new-comers to Ajax next fall. These will be furnished similarly to those in the "east area" and will be equipped with comfortable common rooms, study rooms and kitchenettes. They will be used by students who are moving into Ajax for the first time.

As the year ebbs to a close, all too quickly, there passes in review before the Ajax Skulemen the outstanding events of a year of unique experiences. It has been a good year, and a year full of many happy memories. A new phase of life has begun for those who are returning to civilian life, and for those who have just emerged from secondary school and are at the threshold of their university careers.

And Now Farewell

With only six more weeks to go until the final examinations The Varsity makes its final bow on the stage of Ajax.

If Ajax has been one of the most outstanding achievements in the annals of the University of Toronto, or in university education for that matter, the publication of The Varsity has been a unique achievement in the annals of the "School."

In the past, the editorial staff of The Varsity has been selected from among the most experienced and the keenest of its staff of reporters. These are students who are anticipating a career in journalism and who for that purpose have chosen a course in Arts with English, History and other humanities as major subjects.

To belong to the staff of The Varsity is no mean honour. Associated with the staff are names of those who upon graduation from the University have been successful, not only in life but have made contributions to the country's life. At one time the position of news editor was held by the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, our present prime minister and grandson of the man who published the first newspaper in Upper Canada. A few years ago, the editor of the Strathroy Age Despatch, Mr. George Elliott, held the position of Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity. The editor of The Vancouver Sun, one of Canada's foremost newspapers, Mr. Elmer Philpott and uncle of our present sports editor, Pete, was also editor of The Varsity. Other famous names which should be mentioned are Gregory Clark and the late Stephen Leacock.

Association with names such as these fills us with a mixed feeling of pride and humility; pride for the knowledge that we are following in their footsteps; humility for the knowledge that it will be no easy task to live up to the standards set by such great men.

"Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and others have greatness thrust upon them."

We of the staff at Ajax are much in the position of the latter. When we started in January as cub reporters, little did we realize the responsibility which was soon to fall upon our inexperienced shoulders. During the past few issues we have tried to do our best, to make The Varsity a good paper, and one worthy of its heritage.

Without the benefit of more experienced heads it has been necessary to learn through the painful process of trial and error. Mistakes have been made and many times blushes have come to our faces on reading the paper by daylight. Many of our writers have made their first attempts at writing since joining the staff. However readers have been patient and lenient realizing our lack of experience.

The Varsity at Ajax has tried to make a contribution to the life at Ajax first by boosting the various clubs and organizations now in their early stages and which need the support of the students; secondly by trying to arouse an Ajax spirit and lastly to keep Ajax Skulemen posted on what is happening about the campus.

The Varsity at Ajax, has tried to make a contribution to the life on this campus by supporting various organizations and causes now in their beginnings and which like young plants require encouragement; by trying to arouse an Ajax spirit; and by keeping Skulemen posted on campus happenings.

A word of appreciation should be said to those who have given us such splendid co-operation. To the Faculty, the S.A.C. Office and Hart House, who have given us their best support; to those in the city who have from time to time sent us contributions; to the students at Ajax who have contributed articles, cartoons, and the use of their cars for transportation; to the switchboard for handling our calls; to the engravers and the staff of the Rotary Press for their help and excellent service, the staff of The Varsity owes much and says "Thank You."

Among the pioneering of Ajax the paper has pioneered a tradition in university journalism and it is our hope that next September the students of Ajax will return to a college life richer and fuller because we have done "our bit."

J.F.F.

Incubation Of Incumbencies

We are fast approaching the end of the term and many students have been wondering from time to time why we take certain subjects. Well, the time has come when the veil of secrecy can be no longer maintained. The following are the reasons for each subject as given by one Willie Passorale, a student in third year yo-yo string twisting, a chap who really knows the ropes.

SURVEYING

When all students become peculiar with the use of the Transit and Chain, a search is to be conducted for Al Bedowntameacha who started early in February to paint certain stamptipe posts bright orange. (Why did they paint the posts orange? The boys hadda have something to shoot at.) He has not been heard from since, but when last seen he was striding manfully towards the powerhouse, mumbling softly to himself "I can do anything a paint can".

CALCULUS

This subject was invented by King Thaddeus the Great of Ireland in the year 897 A.D. in order to give this subjects inferiority complexes. (This doubtless explains why Irishmen of today are so....) All British subjects are now required by law to study the subject, or else the Irish nation will rise up as one man and pelt Sir Ernest Bevin with their beanshooters.

ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY

Analytical geometry was introduced sixty-three years ago when a graduate in Engineering Physics with an average of 98.8% commented that the course was too easy. Since its introduction, there have been only two students say that the course was easy. They are both now living quietly in Whitby.

ELECTRICITY

Electricity was invented by Benjamin Franklin in the middle of a thunderstorm. He did this to provide a shocking story for the Saturday Evening Post. Embryo Engineers study the subject in order to be able to locate the main switch at any given mixed house party. (Incidentally the Saturday Evening Post of several Ajax residents is the front steps of Res. 721).

ENGINEERING

This course was originated by two pneumonia ridden Artsmen one day three years ago during a debate in which it was decided that S.P.S. men had too many spare periods on their time-table. (They get a whole hour for lunch, yet.) This subject has been very successful at Ajax because (a) It gave Mr. Shepherd a chance to tell his best jokes, and (b) The theory was proved that the rear chairs are much more comfortable to sleep in than the front ones.

STATICS

The principals or statics have been definitely proven to be an asset in figuring out the Woolzel number of any given female. (Maybe you guys want a better reason.)

Highlights Of First Ajax Year

JAN. 14th—While carpenters still worked, while snow streamed down, 1200 students moved into residence.

JAN. 30th—With sound trucks, posters, conga lines and noisy speeches, campaigning for the Engineering Society elections got under way. The cafeteria was plastered with signs and blasted by loudspeakers. Cattle-cars boasted banners. A bag-piper led a parade through the meal queues in an attempt to drown out the music and slogans blaring from an amplifier. After the Wednesday elections the campus settled down to a quiet life again with M. J. McAuliffe as President.

MARCH 26th—After a hectic night, the first issue of The Varsity, produced at Ajax, hit the classrooms.

MARCH 27th—Professor John Satterly presented his famous lecture on "The Properties, Uses, and Misuses of Liquid Air". He shot a blazing oxygen-soaked wad fifteen feet in the air; he froze a goldfish at 300 degrees; and he fired a "V-2" rocket into the audience.

APRIL 4th—The Arts Committee and The House Committee for Hart House Ajax were elected after a brief and quiet campaign.

APRIL 12th—The giant water fight between Res. 734 and Res. 736 in which the three-inch fire hoses were used proved to be the greatest event of its kind of the year.

APRIL 26th—The University honoured the armed services by a special Victory Convocation for Admiral Percy Nelles, Captain Adelaide Sinclair, General Henry Duncan Graham Crerar, Colonel Agnes Neill, and Air Marshall Robert Leckie. The convocation was addressed by General Crerar and Captain Sinclair.

MAY 10th—Mr. E. B. Jolliffe gave a talk to the C.C.F. club in the Hart House Music Room.

MAY 23rd—Canada's Governor General, His Excellency Viscount Alexander of Tunis and Viscountess Margaret visited the University and His Excellency received the degree of Doctor of Laws. Representatives of the ex-service students on both camps attended a luncheon in Hart House.

MAY 26th—Sir Ernest MacMillan and Elie Spivak formally opened the music room with a recital that thrilled Ajax music lovers.

JUNE 1st—From nine thirty to twelve we got a sample of what will come at the end of July.

JUNE 12th—700 engineers packed the cafeteria for the first annual Skule Dinner held at Ajax. After an excellent steak and mushroom dinner those present listened to speeches. The guest speaker was the Right Honourable C. D. Howe, Minister of Reconstruction. In appreciation of the work done for the students, silver trays were presented to Professor Wright and Mr. Gilley.

JUNE 14th—After three months of publication at Ajax, "The Varsity" ceased operations for the year with an eight page special issue. Control of the paper was returned to the Queen's Park campus and the staff began to attend lectures.

Trophies For Sports Champions At Ajax

The Athletic Office confirmed yesterday the inauguration of two trophies to be awarded annually for intra-mural sports and outstanding athletic achievement at Ajax.

The Dr. Sydney Smith Trophy will be awarded to the residence compiling the highest number of points in intra-mural sport activities. The Dr. Smith Trophy is the first trophy parallels the Dean Young Pennant. Competition for the awarded for basketball, hockey, softball, volleyball, lacrosse, outdoor track and field and tennis. Next year soccer, boxing, wrestling and football will probably be added to the program.

The Smith Trophy will be the proud possession of the residence that attains the highest standing during the year and will be awarded in a similar manner as that enforced with the T.A. Trophy on the Queen's Park Campus.

The J. Roy Gilley Trophy is the most recent sports award at Ajax. This trophy will be awarded to the student at the end of the year who is judged the most worthy in sport as well as in academic work. The Athletic Office will choose a student both on the basis of his record of achievements in sport and the sportsmanlike qualities he has displayed.

Athletic Representatives from the various Residences and the staff of the Athletic Office will meet together to decide upon the recipient of this beautiful trophy.

As a student, Mr. Gilley was on Blue and White and an all-round sportsman. Since last autumn under his direct supervision. Until assuming directorship of Ajax, he was, Comptroller of Hart House since 1932. While he was there the students benefitted by his co-operation in all House activities, particularly in the realm of sports.

He has taken an interest in Ajax sports and has provided accommodations for the varied programme of both outdoor and indoor sports. Lack of labour has delayed the enlargement of the tennis courts which are now under way.

The two trophies will be displayed in a conspicuous place in Hart House Ajax as soon as they have been completed, in order that the students may have the opportunity of viewing them.

Guest Speaker And Head Table

The Engineering Society was host to the Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, President Sydney Smith, Colonel Phillips, Professor Wright, Dean Young, Mr. Gilley, Faculty members, members of various Ajax Committees, and others, at an Engineering Society's Banquet last Wednesday. Principal speaker of the evening was the Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Reconstruction.

Famous Violinist At Final Recital

Canada's outstanding violinist, Mr. Harry Adaskin will present a concert in the Music Room in Hart House for the final musical recital of the term, sponsored by the Hart House Arts committee. Mr. Adaskin will be accompanied by his wife, known to music lovers as Frances Marr.

This brilliant artist came to Canada at the age of three and has lived here ever since. During his musical career he studied under the well-known violinist Sanetini in Chicago and also under Marcel Chailley in Paris.

He was first violinist in the Hart House String Quartet for fifteen years leaving this in 1936 to do solo work. While playing in the Quartet, he travelled all over the North American continent giving concerts and also toured Europe twice.

Mr. Adaskin now does solo work in concerts and in radio. He at present is the music commentator for the C.B.C. He is also known for his intermission remarks on the New York Philharmonic Saturday afternoon broadcasts. He is a faculty member of the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

Frances Marr, or Mrs. H. Adaskin has accompanied Harry Adaskin on the piano for many years. She studied piano at the "Ecole Normale de Musique" in Paris. Mrs. Adaskin has accompanied many

Mr. and Mrs. Adaskin have recently completed a trans-Canada tour playing 22 concerts from Victoria to Truro.

This will be the final recital sponsored by the Arts committee and will be held Tuesday, June 25 at 8:30 p.m. All are requested to be at the music room as early as possible if they wish to hear this concert.

C. D. Howe Guest At Ajax "Skule Dinner"

Story of Ajax Recounted

"The world today is crying out for engineers and scientists. The shortage today is more acute than at any time in our history," said the Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Reconstruction in the Dominion Cabinet, at the first annual Skule Dinner held in the cafeteria Wednesday evening.

Speaking of engineering as a profession, he said, "It is a great calling. The opportunities were never better and I congratulate you in choosing it as a calling."

Among the speakers at the dinner were Lt.-Col. W. E. Phillips, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the University; Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University; Dean C. R. Young, of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering; and Michael J. McAuliffe, President of the Engineering Society.

Seven hundred students and guests packed the cafeteria for the evening. After the steak and mushroom dinner those present settled back to listen to the speakers.

The toast to the King was presented by Mike McAuliffe, who went on to thank the members of the various organizations who "have done much during the first year to make a success of Ajax."

Colonel Phillips congratulated Mr. Howe on his foresight in doing all in his power to aid in the establishment of Ajax as an educational institution when first approached by the University authorities.

The Colonel told of the vast increase in the size of the student body and the work involved in making the alterations necessary to handle the sudden influx of ex-service personnel. He denied the allegation that the university was devoting too much of its interest to the Engineering Faculty, and said that the number of engineers being trained was an investment that would benefit the country as a whole. New buildings for Chemistry and Physics and additions to the Engineering Building must be made before the first class from Ajax arrives in '47.

Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University, said the success of Ajax was due to the hard work of the staff and students. He remarked that at the first of the year he had charged the first class with their obligation to fashion the division. He felt that the student body had fully discharged this obligation and had set the pattern to be followed in future years at Ajax.

The President commented that the failure rate in Engineering before the war was between twenty and thirty percent and that the rate at Easter at Ajax was less than twelve percent.

In all faculties the ex-service personnel are establishing new records. The class standings of the Ajax students will be watched with interest by all the members of the staff.

Dean C. R. Young, told of the changes in the engineering profession that he had witnessed. "Before, an engineer was strictly a technician, interested only in the technological aspects of life. Now the whole field of human activities is open to the engineer. Mr. Howe is an example of an engineer who has become great not only in the profession but in public life as well."

Presentation
In appreciation of the work that they have done on behalf of the students of Ajax, Professor W. J. T. Wright and Mr. J. R. Gilley were presented with engraved silver trays by Morley Horton, on behalf of the student body.

Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe.
The guest speaker, the Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, minister of Reconstruction, was introduced by Gord Beaty, 1st Vice-President of the Engineering Society.

The Minister told the history of Ajax from its inception after Dunkirk until it was transferred to the University for conversion to an educational institution in late 1945. During the war Canada produced over fifty percent of all the ammunition manufactured in the British Empire. Much of this material was filled at Ajax.

When, after Dunkirk, it became necessary to expand the production of explosives, many sites were inspected before Ajax was finally chosen. This site offered many advantages. It was within commuting distance of Toronto, a source of labour. It was surrounded by open fields, a protection against the effects of explosion. The gentle slope assured good drainage and there was an ample supply of water.

It was originally intended that the district would supply all the workers necessary for the project. This, however, was not the case and personnel were imported from Saskatchewan and the Maritimes. Throughout the life of the war plant there was no labour strife and no time was lost due to strikes or other troubles of the sort.

The Dominion Government spent over twelve million dollars for buildings and equipment. The buildings were designed to have a life of five years. In the war years the women at Ajax outnumbered the men by two to one. In this way as in many others, Ajax has changed, commented Mr. Howe.

"I was delighted when Dr. Smith and Col. Phillips approached me with the idea of moving part of the University to Ajax. It is impossible to convert shell-filling plants for use in ordinary industry. I congratulate all of you in entering the profession of engineering. There is no happier work. The world is now crying for engineers and scientists. The shortage is more acute than at any time in our history," Mr. Howe went on.

"We are engaged in enormous industrial reconstruction. We are laying away plans for public projects to be undertaken at any time to take up any slack in employment. At the moment the trained men are not available."

At the conclusion of Mr. Howe's address, a vote of thanks was offered by E. C. Hodgson, Second Vice-President of the Engineering Society.

For The Champ

THE J. ROY GILLEY TROPHY which will be awarded to the outstanding athlete at Ajax. Sports ability, clean play, and outstanding academic achievement will determine the recipient.

Hammers Pound — Students Plug

While Ajax students doze in hot quiet lecture rooms on the third line, across the field a few hundred yards away on line 2, with which students will soon become better acquainted, there is the scene of noisy activity. The pounding of hammers; the hiss of compressed air escaping from spray guns; the shriek of power-driven saws biting their way through lumber offer a confusion in marked contrast with the quiet lecture rooms which are now in use.

In view of the fact that these students are training to be engineers and require a knowledge of drawing, provision is being made for enlargement of the facilities for Engineering Drawings.

Buildings 2069, 2047, 2057, 2007, and 2040, located near the railway siding, just inside the "southern area" are being converted into well-lighted drafting rooms.

These rooms will be spacious and equipped with fluorescent lighting. In 2007 there will be a branch of the Engineering Society's Store to accommodate students who would otherwise have to go down to 313-B for their drawing supplies.

It is on line 2 however, that most of the classrooms will be located.

Most of the new buildings are being equipped as laboratories. At present the Chemical Laboratories (218 and 216) are in the most advanced stages of completion. These two buildings are of brick and are similar to the present chemical buildings. Already work tables have been set up and water and gas supply pipes have been installed.

Because of the great amount of calculations required, separate Students' Calculating Rooms have been provided, equipped with long tables much like those in the technical library.

Other smaller laboratories in these buildings are equipped for demonstrators' laboratory work, blowpipe laboratories, balance rooms, and chemical store rooms. The latter will be more conveniently located in the same building rather than in a separate building. Two of the buildings are being used for Physics Laboratories. In 213-B which is termed "Applied Physics" building, dark rooms for experiments in light are being installed; there are also rooms being specially built for experiments in sound. In 213-A which is known as the "Arts Physics" Lab, the carpenters are still engaged in partitioning the various rooms.

Lectures as well as laboratories make up the curriculum and classrooms must be provided for the former. Most of the rooms for this purpose are located in 214, although there will be some in the other buildings. Most of the lecture rooms will be equipped for demonstration experiments and most of the floors in these rooms are built in steps.

When building 210 is completed it will house the machine, the electrical and the instrument laboratories.

The long 202 at the north end of the line will contain the laboratory for studying "Mechanics of Materials" and will contain testing equipment.

Felicitations --- From Those At The Helm

FROM THE DEAN —

When through the exigencies of overlapping sessions a few enthusiastic and resolute "Schoolmen" had laid on their literary shoulders the task of carrying on The Varsity in the tradition of many years standing, they assumed a unique responsibility. It was conventionally assumed by those who stood on journalistic side lines that it couldn't be done. Engineers, said they, may be able to set up a transit, read meaningful figures from a slide rule, or weigh a chemical residue with meticulous accuracy, but they couldn't write, even if they knew what to write about.

The doubters have their answer. The Varsity has appeared regularly and has amply met the standard of Queen's Park. It has served two useful purposes: the student body has had a useful medium of expression and the onlookers have been shown that engineers can write and edit a student paper with the best of them.

It is to be regretted that not all those who could write actually did so. There must have been scores at Ajax who could have turned a few graceful sentences of description, comment or criticism. Nothing is more valuable to a young man than the cultivation of expression in speech or written word. He will make little impression in the world if he remains inarticulate. The only way to avoid that sorry state is to speak when he has anything to say and to write when there is any one to read.

While the end of the session is still some distance off, there are indications that it will be achieved with credit to the great student body that took possession of Ajax five months ago. Many a man in it will bulk large in the affairs of this country in another decade or two. I cannot help thinking that they will often say that Ajax had a great deal to do with it.

—C. R. YOUNG, Dean.

FROM THE DIRECTOR —

Much has been accomplished in the commencement of the session, to June 14th, the date of the final issue of the Ajax Varsity. It is not too much to say that traditions have already been formed—traditions which will have a lasting effect at Ajax.

The staff of the Ajax Varsity; the Executive of the Engineering Society, Ajax Branch; the Residence House Committees; Hart House Ajax Committees; the Athletic Representatives and all student organizations have contributed in high degree to the fine spirit that exists in the Ajax Division.

The success of this new and im-

From the President —

It is with pride that I write a message to the students of the Ajax Division for the last issue of The Varsity during the session of 1945-1946. That pride is founded in the success of the Division. That success, is, of course, due in part to the devotion and the capacity of its staff, instructional and administrative. In high degree, the success is due, however, to the co-operation, outlook, hard work and competence of the students. It was once said that "Universities would be fine places if there were no students." The statement is neither witty nor true. The main objective of the University of Toronto is to enable young men and young women to educate themselves, that is, to equip themselves to be self-starting and self-propelling in their own intellectual and moral development. That objective was never more clearly delineated than it has been in the case of the Ajax Division.

The Division was organized primarily for the benefit of ex-service personnel. The reports of your instructors may be summarized in the statement that they have never had more interesting and more mature students than you are. I am confident that the record established by you in the Easter tests will be maintained, and even enhanced, in the final examinations.

The activities of Hart House Ajax and of other extra-curricular projects testify to your resolution to have for yourselves programmes designed to develop the many aspects of your talents and of your personalities.

On January 21st of this year I said to you in my address of welcome: "In a peculiar sense, Ajax Division is now yours! We will help you in making it an integral part of the University, a part that will be second to no other in its tone and purpose. You will have the thrill of pioneers. You will always be spoken of as the group who opened and who fashioned the Ajax Division. On you there is therefore a special obligation not given to other entering classes."

For your acceptance of that obligation and for your splendid response to it, your University thanks you and wishes for you interesting, arduous and bountiful days throughout your courses.

SIDNEY SMITH.

June 11, 1946.

portant branch of the University is due in no small measure to the splendid co-operation of staff and students.

I am delighted to have this opportunity of extending all good wishes to every student in the forthcoming examinations.

—J. R. GILLEY

S.A.C. NOTES

All students wishing summer employment, register with the SAC office immediately, even if you have already done so.

Any students wishing to work in a canning factory for 10 evenings commencing June 24th, contact the SAC office as soon as possible. Transportation provided.

FROM THE DIRECTOR OF STUDIES —

With this issue, The Varsity concludes a year of publication very unusual in many respects. Its printing in Oshawa and in a new form are noteworthy. But for us, in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, the most interesting feature has been the publication of The Varsity in recent weeks by a staff drawn almost entirely from the members of our own faculty. We all appreciate the assistance of the Students' Council in making this possible, and extend to Jim Fydel and his staff our heartiest congratulations on a job well done.

The temporary discontinuance of The Varsity brings sharply to mind that we are approaching the end of the first session at Ajax; and, while the session has been strenuous, yet, it has been one to which many will look back with pleasant memories of a congenial community. We, of the teaching staff, wish the Editor and his assistants, who have made such a splendid contribution to the spirit of Ajax, our most sincere good wishes for success in their professional careers.

W. J. T. WRIGHT.

FROM THE SUPERINTENDENT OF RESIDENCES —

With the first Ajax academic year rapidly slipping into history, the Residence Department would like to comment on the manner in which the students have adjusted themselves from a wartime existence to life on the campus, and the pursuit of an university career.

Although there were people who suggested that 1,200 students in residence, mostly veterans, would present so many serious problems that life would be difficult for everyone, we did not agree. We should like to state that, up to the present, our belief in student good sense has been justified. Considering that the majority of students had spent many years prior to coming to Ajax in the fighting services and had been living the "rugged life" with its intensive concentration on specific objectives, and orders from "higher authority" conversion to campus life has been remarkably smooth.

It would be incorrect to say there have been no residence problems. For some time, many of the students would not accept their responsibilities as individuals, with a vote to approve or disapprove. They preferred to let someone else do the directing, while they indulged in a little heckling. This resulted in a certain degree of disorganization in some of the houses.

The House Committees, elected by and from their own housemates, in some cases were slow to offer the necessary leadership. This was understandable since they were hurriedly elected before their house-mates really knew them. Further, being on the same academic level as their housemates, and without previous university experience, they lacked self-confidence. For the most part, the Committee men, in spite of these difficulties were well selected and have now established themselves as capable leaders and are enjoying the confidence and support of their respective houses.

Within the last few weeks, an individual residence awareness has been developing. This house consciousness has been mainly due to various house achievements—academic, athletic and social, and to the realization on the part of the residents that the atmosphere and tone of their house is their own responsibility. If, for example, they wish a quiet house during study hours it is within their own power to have it that way. Now most of the students have completed the swing from expecting to be told what to do, to the place where they are interested in house government, knowing they have a voice in directing its affairs.

It would be difficult to single out any particular group of students for special commendation. All have contributed to the success of residence life in a variety of ways. The steadiness and determination of the older students in each residence have been a significant factor in giving stability to the houses. Many of the youngest students, with little or without any service experience, and who have found it difficult to understand the world of the experienced veteran, have given a fair measure of the traditional "rah rah" to the campus. The great in-between group has more than contributed its share to residence life.

The efforts of the Committees and their Chairmen are truly appreciated. By their persistence and a belief in the desirability of local government they have brought along their houses to the place where cooperation, tolerance and good sense have, for the most part, become the guiding principles.

Although the adjustment period has not been easy, we believe the transformation from "Servicemen in civilian clothes" to civilians has been accomplished. The first chapter in Ajax Residence History has been an interesting one.

Hart House --- The Hub Of Social Life At Ajax

Students' Council

The Students' Administrative Council is the representative organization of the undergraduate student body. The Ajax S.A.C. consists of the heads of the student government organizations, a faculty member—Prof. W. J. T. Wright—a general secretary, and the Editor of "The Varsity". The Ajax branch forms part of the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto, which consists of members from all the faculties, colleges, and undergraduate organizations on the Toronto campus.

In its capacity of representing the student body, the S.A.C. endeavours to make complaints or suggestions on behalf of individual students or groups to the university authorities. In addition, it is the office through which the undergraduates may act when dealing with outside organizations. For example, as a result of the large number of complaints and misunderstandings referred to the S.A.C. with regard to the administration and allocation of war-time housing in Ajax village, a thorough investigation was conducted, the results of which are available in the S.A.C. files.

In addition to these functions, the S.A.C. administers a Loan Fund for deserving ex-service personnel, and has to date made a large number of interest-free loans to students.

At present the office is keeping in touch with a large number of business firms and government agencies in an endeavour to secure suitable employment for as many students as possible during the summer vacation. The S.A.C. office keeps a confidential file on all persons desiring employment, and endeavours, in so far as possible, to students who attended. One of the special advantages of this arrangement is that the Record Player system can be used. A fine selection of music by the world's finest organists, choirs and composers is thus made available.

Financially the Chapel is in a good position. They have been able to provide representation at an S.C.M. Conference, present attractive Orders of Service, present an altar book for use in Hart House Chapel, provide first class concerts by outstanding young musicians, etc., and still have a balance on hand. The money has been provided both by a grant and by collections taken at the General Service.

The University Chapel may refer to two things: first, a room set aside in Hart House Ajax for the use of all students, Roman Catholic and Protestant; second, the organization of Protestants on the campus for the purpose of worship and study, and participation in the wider field of Christian interest.

This organization is under the direction of the Padre and an Advisory Council consisting of the two Wardens (students), four students and a member of the staff. There is also a Chapel Board consisting of the aforementioned and the Treasurer, Secretary, Sidesmen and Music-Master. Elections for the new officials will take place next October.

The General Service of Worship is held in the Music Room, the Chapel being too small to accommodate the increasing number of allot jobs to those who need them. With regard to housing accommodation, the Council has managed to place in homes in the surrounding area a number of married students who have been unable to procure houses in Ajax village.

The Students' Administrative

Council publishes the Varsity, Torontoensis, and the Students' Handbook. It represents the student body at University functions and on public occasions, and endeavours to promote inter-university functions whenever it is deemed advisable.

Hart House Tuck Shop

Hart House has many fine features, one of them being the large Tuck Shop. The students keep the men behind the counter very busy, which proves the popularity of this modern and spacious Tuck Shop. This Tuck Shop attempts to carry all the needs of students at Ajax, as Ajax is not any too close to any shopping district. After a hard night of studying the students manage to go to the Tuck Shop and have a snack before they turn in for the night. At noon hour the place is a hive of activity when commuters who bring their lunches crowd the tables to eat their dinner.

CHESS CLUB

The Hart House Ajax Chess Club is concluding a highly successful season in which a total of 136 games were played in the continuous ladder tournament. Of these, the challengers won 85 (including 36 by default) with only four drawn games. The most active player was Nathan with 7 wins, 8 losses, and 2 draws. The highest batting averages were Matthews 11-0-0, Morgan 3-0-0, and McPherson 10-1-0, while Gilpin has the record for wins by default, 8 of his 10 total!

In March the club sent a team of seven to a "rapid-transit" (10 seconds a move!) tournament in Toronto. While they failed to garner any prizes, they did fairly well against the more experienced opposition.

Early in April a nine man team played the pick of the Toronto club and were thoroughly beaten 8-1, no draws, Matthews eking out the lone win after a two hour struggle. The Toronto club is very strong, having reached the semi-finals of the Toronto Chess League championship this year.

The club's pride and joy is the chess room in Hart House complete with tables and chairs, a locker in which members may keep their sets, and a bulletin board on which are posted the ladder, rules, and club notices. The room was outfitted through the efforts of Mr. Emond, director of Hart House.

GLEE CLUB

The Glee Club was started quite late in the season, but in spite of that some good work has been done. The Club meets regularly on Tuesday afternoons at 5:15 p.m. in the music room.

In order that it might have something to work with at first, Hart House Glee Club very kindly lent the club some music. During the Easter recess the club was fortunate in being able to get a first installment of music of its own.

The club is preparing a couple of pieces which it hopes to sing during the intermission between dramatic numbers on June 19th. This time of year there are so many outdoor attractions that only the really keen singers are coming to practices, but the keen ones are turning out regularly and working well.

Those members who are showing themselves to be really keen now will form a first rate nucleus for a larger and, we hope, really ambitious glee club which will be able to start serious work just as soon as the Fall session gets under way.

Students desiring copies of photographs appearing in this issue are requested to contact The Varsity office.

CAMERA CLUB

A successful if not spectacular year has been experienced by the Ajax Camera Club. Sponsored by Hart House under the able direction of Mr. Emond and the assistance of Gord Broomhall, an excellent start has developed.

A 5x7 view camera, individual lockers, flood lights, a club room, a chemical and washing room, two enlargers, and four dark rooms are a few of the facilities. The members have found everything that they need in the pursuit of their art. Mr. Emond and Hart House are indeed to be congratulated on their effort.

Talks and demonstrations since its initial meeting in March have covered such subjects as: long range photography, third dimension, development, darkroom technique, and portraiture. An Exhibition is planned by the Camera Club next month and all students interested are invited to submit prints.

NEWMAN CLUB

The embryonic offspring of the Toronto Newman Club Family, isn't the Ajax Division of the Toronto University, is rapidly taking form, showing signs of healthy life, and giving promise of being a welcome and creditable member of the Parent Body and Toronto Family. Public speaking, debating, and social study groups have been formed. But the most interesting and educational portion of the past several meetings have been the apologetic sessions which bring all the members into active participation. Having been conceived late in March, the Clubs active growth is pronounced as very satisfactory by "Doctor" Walter Hirschfeld, formerly an active member of Toronto Newman but now a member of the Engineering Faculty of Ajax.

For those who need enlightenment the Newman Club is a club of Catholic Culture and Catholic Fellowship. Organized in the non-Catholic Colleges and universities of Canada and United States. It is the Catholic Club for the students who attend these schools. Its aims and purposes are identical with its activities. Religious, educational and social in that order of importance. Activities of the Newman Club range from Corporate Communion, Discussion Study Clubs, Retreats, Lectures and debates of Parties, Dances, Picnics, Dramatics etc.

Each Newman Club has a chaplain for the spiritual guidance and assistance of the members. Rev. J. E. McHenry M.A. is the chaplain of Toronto Newman, Rev. B. T. Kyte, the local parish priest is the chaplain of the Ajax Division. Mass is offered on Sundays and Holy Days in the Recreation Hall. Confessions are heard on Thursday evenings in the Chaplains Office in Hart House.

The Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship

The V.C.F. is a group of students who believe that life is more than making money, and that the greatest need of today is a faith in Jesus Christ.

The V.C.F. began in Cambridge University, and has spread to most English speaking universities. The Ajax branch was organized in February with the assistance of students from the Queen's Park Campus. It meets on Thursdays from 7:00 to 8:00 p.m. in the committee room by the circulating library.

The only requirement for membership is sufficient interest to attend the meetings. There are no fees. The dozen odd members represent several churches. Meetings are informal, and deal with topics of Christian faith and living. Usually an open discussion occupies a large part of the hour.

The principal event of the V.C.F. year was the visit of a group of "Youth for Christ" workers from Toronto, with the girls' octet and Rev. Charles Templeton. Although the attendance was not large the event was well received.

Highlights --- Outstanding Ajax Campus News Events

Sir Ernest at Ajax

Sir Ernest MacMillan was one of the many prominent men to visit Ajax throughout the term. These men brought entertaining evenings with them for the students. These pleasant evenings contributed greatly to the social life at Ajax. Recitals, revues, dances and many other social functions play a prominent part in the life at Ajax.

Social Parties For Residences

During the term at Ajax, which is not as yet over, many residences, as a break from their studies, held social functions for their members. These social evenings were mostly in the form of house dances, but sleigh-riding parties and wiener roasts were also held. The shortage of girls on the campus did not hamper any of the social activities arranged by each house.

Girls for these occasions were transported from Toronto, Oshawa, Whitby, and other nearby localities. Buses were chartered for the girls from Toronto to get out to Ajax, while the students arranged the transportation for the girls from the vicinity.

Dances were the most popular of the house parties as they were more convenient to arrange. The music at these dances were records played on their own record players or a rented P.A. system. The residents usually had a little snack prepared for their guests at these dances. Soft drinks and do-nuts were the main food but coffee, sandwiches, cakes and other light lunches were served.

Near the first part of the term when the snow was plentiful, a few residences organized sleigh riding parties, which always were enjoyed. As Ajax is more or less in the country, a sleigh ride party was the ideal social function during the winter months, since there was plenty of open space covered with snow.

Now that the summer months have brought warm weather to Ajax the social convenors are making plans for wiener roasts for their residences, Pickering Beach, which is not too far from the campus, has already been the site of a few wiener roasts.

Vice-Regal Convocation

Their Excellencies Viscount Alexander of Tunis and the Viscountess accompanied by Col. W. E. Phillips, chairman of the Board of Governors as they strolled across the campus to Convocation Hall where His Excellency received the degree of Doctor of Laws at a special convocation held May 23. During the afternoon a number of Ajax students were presented to Their Excellencies.

Athletic Nights Great Success

Ajax Athletic Nights are now a part of a growing Ajax tradition. Four of these monthly sports round ups have been presented by Buff Horton, and a gigantic finale is planned. Their prime purpose was to wind up the monthly inter-residence sports program, by the presentation of the Dean Young Pennant to the top house. Their secondary purpose, well fulfilled, has been to bring some colour and entertainment to our isolated campus.

Each program has featured a stage revue, sponsored by the Toronto Citizens Committee, time given free, and expenses paid by The Engineering Society. For the first Athletic Night, there was the Sophistications, a show which contained some fine soloists.

Four days before the Easter tests, the best revue of all, "Hittin' The Jackpot", was brought to Ajax. Announced by the jocular M.C. Kay Kenny were, a versatile, well rehearsed, radiant chorus of ten, and exceptional singers of starring classic and swing tunes.

"Delaney's Revue", the next presentation, was renamed "Delaney's Dilemma" by a disappointed audience. It was ragged, and lacked the talent of the other shows. The fourth show, "Williams Revue", was

Buenas Noches, Senioritas

Due to the shortage of girls on the Ajax campus, the residents usually bring out partners for their social evenings from Toronto, Oshawa, Whitby and other nearby localities. The above picture shows the driver with two of the beauties who attend these social functions of the residences. From the good results of the first few house parties no difficulty was met in obtaining girls for all social activities at Ajax.

Pastimes Occupy Much Spare Time

Besides having social functions with the opposite sex to relieve the monotony of the residences, the students arranged many recreational pastimes to occupy their time.

Some of the house committees obtained ping pong tables for their common room in their residence. Ping pong tournaments were started for those interested and soon active competition was noted in each residence which added interest to the house.

Bridge also plays an important part in the entertainment field of each residence. All the houses on the campus have bridge players of some sort or other. If there were enough bridge fans in a residence a tournament was usually organized. It was not uncommon to see a bridge game last to the hour of sunrise.

Nightly bull-sessions start after the bulk of the homework is done. These sessions are usually about some problem in homework or about the latest current affairs, while others exchange experiences.

The unauthorized water fights that raged in the houses once in a while add greatly to the amusements of the residents. These fights do not happen very often as they are frowned upon by the heads of the residences.

There are many other small items that make up the recreation schedule of the Ajax skulemen in residence. The class of 4T9 have made a good record in making life pleasant and enjoyable at Ajax, and when the next term commences in the fall we hope that the class of 5T0 will follow the paved road 4T9 had laid and may they live up to the spirit of the life at Ajax.

Athletics --- Highlights Of The Past Season

Speaking OF SPORT

THANKS ATHLETIC OFFICE STAFF!

Ajax sports have made history. Out of 1500 students approximately 1200 have been or are active in organized sport.

Any achievements which may have been made by the Athletic Association can be attributed to the fine cooperation and hard work of the residence Athletic Representatives and their President Doug. Andrews. It was the duty of these men to carry out the recreational program which the Athletic Office had planned.

The non-compulsion system of sports appealed to the Athletic Office. Each man felt that it was his responsibility to see that his residence win the competition. Friendly rivalry ensued and the sports ball kept on rolling.

The Dean Young Pennant awarded to the residence chalking up the greatest number of points during the month kept Intramural play at a high standard. The Gilley Trophy and Dr. Sydney Earl Smith have had the same effect for individual and team play. These awards will become a tradition at Ajax.

The vast Athletic Program on this campus would never have been possible without the aid of The Ajax Engineering Society. The Society under president Mike McAuliffe has backed the sports activities both financially and morally. As the D.V.A. grants were delayed at the beginning of the year, Athletic equipment suffered. The Engineering Society underwrote the cost of much of the Ajax equipment. The Society made the Athletic nights a success by defraying the cost of transportation the various road shows to and from Ajax and serving refreshments to the troupes.

When the Athletic office took over in January, sports facilities were very limited. It consisted of three partly finished hockey cushions, one basketball court and one baseball diamond together with four tennis courts. After much effort in the part of the Superintendent's Office and fine cooperation of the Directorate, there has been added two additional tennis courts, three softball diamonds, one running track, three rugby fields and the hockey cushions completed and now are being used for box-lacrosse and borden ball. The program for next year is an extensive one. Preparations are now underway for construction of a large outdoor skating rink where music will be provided for the skaters' enjoyment. The athletic office stated that "every effort is being made to have further recreation facilities made available by September." It is hoped that construction of a new building, housing at least two large playing areas together with accommodations for wrestling, fencing, weight lifting and gymnastics will be forthcoming.

The Athletic Association stated that history was made by the students themselves. History would never have been made in the realms of Ajax sport if it were not for the hard work of Buff Horton, the Athletic Supervisor, Jim Follwel his assistant and Miss Pucherin the secretary who did a lot of the work about the office, as well as act as magnet to bring Athletic Representatives up to Athletic meetings. The office has been responsible for the Athletic Nights, planning sport schedules, and burned the midnight oil awarding the Dean Young Pennant, Buff Horton and Jim Follwel have been responsible for putting Ajax inter-Faculty teams in the field. They are now training the Ajax rugby team which in all probability will constitute a great part of the strength of The Blue and White. Fred Doty expressed the sentiment of the student body. "We are fortunate to have at Ajax such men who combine the power of organization, knowledge of sport and personality as Buff Horton and Jim Follwel."

Check That Man!

The Ajax and Scarboro lacrosse teams met in one of the Ajax sports meets during the term. These and other sports developed a great many sportsmen at Ajax, and proved that the S.P.S. men are not only engineers, but could handle a lacrosse stick as well as a slip-stick. Sports were encouraged as much as possible at Ajax, so as to give each man a chance to co-operate and work with his fellow man. This type of man can qualify more readily for any position in the Engineering field.

Wham! . . . A Homer?

The crowd cheered as an Ajaxer slugged the ball pitched by the opposing team. Baseball featured in the great number of sports played at Ajax. These games gave the Jaxmen a good opportunity to relax from their studies a few times a week and many students participated in them at Ajax. As there were various sports at the Ajax campus, students took part in as many of these as they could spare the time for. All these sports make good substitutes for physical training which is not given to the students at Ajax.

Future of Blues Safe With Champs

According to Warren Stevens, Athletic Supervisor of the University of Toronto, everybody is looking forward to a successful season of rugby next year.

Ajax will probably be no mean contributor to the Blue and White. Among those expected to play are, Roe, Leeming, Karrys, Doty and Williams, all former Argo players. Robertson who played for the Beaches, McLean for St. Michaels and Hanson a Malvern Col. star. Jack Glendinning, John Taylor, Ted Coates, Don Ball, Bob Gordon and many others are now turning up for the practices every Tuesday and Thursday. It is expected that the top players will play on the Senior Blue. The men who are unable to make the "Blue" team will have a chance to play with the Intermediates against McMaster, Western, and O.A.C. in intercollegiate competitions. It is expected that Ajax will be represented in the Intramural competition in Toronto by at least one team or maybe two.

Ajax has many football stars studying the technical points of rugby. We were able to contact a few of the champs last night, result—a short who's who.

Jack Leeming, flying wing and end, an ex-Argo and Beaches player who is now hibernating out in residence 729. Jack played last year.

The Girls Can — Can You?

The can-can chorus from "Hittin' the Jackpot Revue" which was unanimously chosen by the Engineers, in true Ajax fashion, as a "Splendid Way to Forget Our Worries For an Hour" during the second Athletic Night. These nights, which were held once a month, featured the presentation of the Dean Young Pennant, guest speakers on sport, the Ajax Hot Jax, and a show like this to top off the evening. Once a month at least, studies were neglected by the men of Ajax.

One of the features of the Ajax division of the University of Toronto has been the drafting rooms with spacious and sunny lighting or with soft fluorescent lighting for dull days, drafting becomes a pleasure at Ajax.

Athletic Nights

better all round. The vocalist Phyliss Worton, and the pianist George Luscombe were exceptional. For the final 'Night', highlights from "Stop and Go" are expected. At most of the Athletic Nights Ajax's own band, "The Hot Jaxs" played, and improved greatly during the year. And there were athletics at the Athletic Nights.

Roy Dilworth led a hot stove discussion on rugby, with Ted Reeve, Ted Morris, Lew Hayman and Warren Stevens. Tip Tops played baseball against our Ajax team. Scarborough was beaten by Jax's lacrosse players.

The final Athletic Night will be on July the fourth. The Sidney Smith Cup will be presented to the champion residence of the year. The J. Roy Gilley Trophy will be awarded to the best all-round Ajax athlete. There will be a dinner, a top revue, and a dance.

Buff Horton and The Athletic Association are to be congratulated for their "Athletic Nights", may they carry on, an Ajax Tradition.

Future of Blues

for the Argos. Before he joined the army in 1942 he played right wing on the Beaches. This resulted in an intermission for Jack's rugby life as he sweated it out as a lieutenant. He played four years with the Humber College squad in Toronto and in 1940 joined the Beaches. Now at Ajax, Jack Leeming is hoping to play for the Blues.

Steve Karry is another refugee from the Argos. He played half at Northern Vocational Collegiate in Toronto. Unlike Leeming, Steve's rugby did not terminate when he joined the navy. He is now trying out for the Blue and White. Steve not only plays rugby but holds a few Ontario records such as the broad jump and discus.

The Argos are well represented at Ajax. John Roe is another of the notorious team. He also played with the Calgary Stampers and South London Collegiate. Last year he played with the Argos. Jitterbugging keeps our hero in trim. Johnny does not restrict his sport activities to rugby but plays baseball, hockey, basketball and other sports. In London Ont. Roe set a half-mile record. John is not entering the half-mile at Ajax. "My half mile days are over. I'm entering the 440 and 220."

DRAMATICS

The Dramatic Society was organized early in the term by a small but enthusiastic group of thespians who immediately went to work on two short plays which will be presented in the Recreation Hall shortly. Under the capable and ingenious direction of Mr. Harry Brock, interest grew and talent was brought out to the fullest extent as far as is possible with one-act plays. At first there was much concern in casting but the director, Mr. Brock, had little difficulty in doing this since he has been in show business for a considerable time and knows "characters".

It was not long before the stage crew was organized under the management of Bob Turner. The stage crew were soon given every facility for stage productions and they now have at their disposal many lights, curtains, backdrops, sound effect equipment, and various pieces of furniture. They have done an excellent job of making up the sets for the forthcoming plays, and the casts of the plays have promised to do as fine a job on the characterization of the parts of this play.

This year the group who turned out for the club was small but next year it is hoped a larger number will join. The members plan bigger and better things next year with full-fledged three-act plays being the major productions. Next year the club will endeavour to have a complete and interesting program. It has planned to have lessons in stage carriage, make-up, voice presentation, and characterization.

First Drama, And Choral At Ajax

Thursday evening, June 20, at 8:45 the Drama Club and Glee Club will present an evening of plays and concert in the Recreation Hall. This is the first appearance of both these Ajax clubs on the Ajax campus. A large audience is expected to turn out to witness the first presentations of these two organizations.

The programme will consist of two one-act plays and a concert. The first play is an army comedy called "Pack Up Your Troubles" taken from the American Army show, "The Army Play by Play". The Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. Clive, will give their concert after this play. The last item on the programme will be another play entitled "Helena's Husband", which is also a comedy and deals with ancient history.

The students have devoted a great deal of their time in rehearsals for this show which will be the first ever performed since the Ajax Division was formed. The stage crews have been burning the midnight oil for the past few weeks to prepare for this gala evening.

Archers Meeting

Any one who is interested in archery should contact either Mr. J. Hohn of residence 724 who will be on hand at 7 p.m. on the archery range in the rear of 721, or Mr. J. Bessin of 725 who is also expected to be on hand at the same time. Students who are fairly expert in the sport should report on Friday, Monday or Wednesday.
